$975,600,000 May Be Asked To Run WPA For 8 Months

Reported Proviso Of Roosevelt Would Open Way For Supplement

Proviso for Relief

By John B. Oakes.
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt will urge Congress to appropriate $975,600,000 for 1941 WPA needs with the proviso that it all may be spent in the first eight months if necessary, it was reliably reported yesterday.

In this way, the President would adhere to his January budget estimate and at the same time open the way to a supplemental relief appropriation next winter if economic conditions warrant.

The President, who outlined his plan at a conference with seven key Representatives and WPA Administrator Harrington yesterday, is expected to make his recommendations in a letter to Speaker Bankhead, which probably will be sent to the Capitol today.

In the January budget, $985,000,000 was projected for WPA for the fiscal year beginning July 1. This figure has subsequently been corrected to $975,600,000; and it is this latter sum which the President will suggest be appropriated for the entire year. But he will ask, it was reported, that the usual requirement that relief funds be spread over the entire 12 months be waived with the understanding that they be spread over a minimum period of eight months.

Same Rate of Expenditure

If the 1941 appropriation were used up in the first eight months—although the WPA would not be required to spend it all—the rate of expenditure would be approximately the same as for the current year.

Congress has granted the WPA $1,477,000,000 for 1940, a sum which averages $984,000,000 for eight months.

One well-informed observer told The Post yesterday that "nobody seriously expects the budget recommendation ($975,600,000) to last the entire year." He said that it was anticipated that when the year begins July 1, Col. Harrington would tentatively allot the appropriation on an eight-month basis—unless there is a remarkable pickup in business activity and employment.

The Post's informant indicated that he thought it highly probable that about February, 1941, a supplemental relief appropriation would have to be made to round out the last four months of the fiscal year.

By sticking to his budget estimates at least tentatively, the President is believed to have sidestepped the necessity for asking for new taxes or for an increase in the $45,000,000,000 debt limit, both alternatives anathema to this election-year Congress.

Cutting Began Last Month

The WPA announced yesterday that it had cut its rolls from 2,204,409 April 3, to 2,161,811 April 10. Cutting of the rolls began last month in order to keep within the 1940 appropriation.

Meanwhile, conferees on the agriculture appropriation bill neared consideration of the outlays for parity payments and surplus commodities disposal which were added by the Senate to the House bill.

In a speech before the International Union of Operating Engineers, an A. F. of L. affiliate, Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said yesterday he thought "relief should be administered by the States and localities with a substantial Federal grant amounting perhaps to two-thirds of the total cost of all work relief and direct relief."

Shun Dewey Challenge, Taft Advised

Urged to Forego Maryland Primary; Decision Deferred Till Survey Is Made

Dewey in the West

THOMAS E. DEWEY, speaking at Oklahoma City, insisted that this country's problems are to be found at home, and assailed the New Deal record on farm and business difficulties.—Page 2.

WASHINGTON WAS referred to by Dewey as a "boom town" where employes were provided with costly "monumental offices," but Commissioner J. Russell Young and others objected.—Page 3.

Taft in a Dilemma

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Challenged by New York District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey to meet him in primary combat in Maryland, and defied by G. O. P. organization leaders there, Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, last night deferred what probably would be the most important decision of his Republican Presidential campaign.

Taft ordered a quick county-by-county survey of his Maryland strength and said he will announce his intentions after a report today. Some of his advisers are known to have urged against any primary showdown in Maryland, where a hot G. O. P. factional row is in progress.

Dewey's unexpected Maryland challenge, meanwhile, received swift indorsement from former Gov. Harry W. Nice, who declared all Republican factions in Maryland would support the Presidential bid of the young New Yorker. Nice predicted Dewey's challenge would go uncontested. It was reported that William F. Broening, opposing Nice for the G. O. P. Senatorial nomination also favors Dewey.

Prestige at Stake

If Taft enters the primary against Dewey in Maryland May 6, he would risk the same fate that befell his colleague, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, who was bowled over by Dewey in Wisconsin and Nebraska primaries.

But if he rejects Dewey's challenge the Ohioan might face loss of prestige in refusing to do battle with the crusading young aspirant for the Republican nomination.

Friends said that if Taft goes into Maryland he would "jump in with both feet" and campaign the State from stem to stern in a contest comparable to the Tydings-Lewis free-for-all of 1938. They pointed out that he entered the Ohio Republican Senatorial primaries similarly over organization opposition in 1938, with only one county organization out of 88 for him.

"Favors Dewey"

Dewey's invitation to Taft to meet in their first hand to hand contest was hardly off the press before former Gov. Nice, himself seeking the Senatorial nomination, commented: "It has been quite evident for some time that the preponderant political opinion among Republicans of Maryland favors the candidacy

Stark Asks Funds Be Spread Over Six Years; Would Restore 5-5-3 Ratio

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Initial funds for building a $277,000,000 bomb-proof set of locks for the Panama Canal were voted by the Senate late yesterday, as the Navy asked $3,600,000,000 to provide a fleet equal to Britain's armada.

Admiral Stark, chief of naval operations, told the Senate Naval Affairs Committee the United States should spend $600,000,000 a year for shipbuilding the next six years, to restore the 5-5-3 ratio with Great Britain and Japan established 18 years ago. This would provide 125 war vessels—3 aircraft carriers, 18 cruisers, 68 destroyers and 36 submarines and complete ships underway.

Opposition to such a program, however, was voiced by Chairman Walsh, who declared he favored approving only part of the construction at this time.

Walsh Predicts Approval

"I'm impressed with the evidence presented on the need for such a 25 per cent increase in the fleet," he said, "but the 11 per cent expansion voted by the House is about all that can be laid down during the next two years with existing facilities. Next year, if necessary, we can vote the additional ships."

Walsh predicted Congressional approval of the 11 per cent enlargement, possibly with some "moderate increases" if the Navy can show a few additional ships can be crowded into the two-year program. Other members of the committee, led by Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, appeared bent on voting the full 25 per cent increase.

Funds for the new Panama Canal locks are carried in a $223,362,517 War Department civil functions appropriations bill passed by the Senate yesterday. Fifteen millions in cash and $99,000,000 in contract authorizations are provided to carry forward the work, expected to take six years.

By Voice Vote

Passage came by voice vote after economy forces beat down an attempt to add $30,000,000 to the $70,000,000 allowed by the House for flood control work. The measure closely adheres to the President's $20,000,000 over the amount voted by the House.

Funds for the new locks were eliminated in the House on the ground plans are not yet complete. President Roosevelt, however, called for approval of the project, which defense leaders say would assure the canal remaining open to quick passage of the Navy in time of war.

Admiral Stark will take the witness stand again this morning in support of the expansion bill, which would authorize 22 new warships and permit the Navy, if funds are appropriated, to go ahead in the next two years with construction of 63 ships at a cost of about $1,177,-

Eyewitness Says:

British in Control of Narvik; Germans Retreating to South

J. Norman Lodge, veteran Associated Press newsman and winner of the Croix de Guerre with the Twenty-sixth Division of the A. E. F., is the first American correspondent to reach Narvik, Norway's Arctic ore port, since the Germans occupied it April 9. His dispatch is the first neutral report as to the actual situation in the Narvik area.

By J. Norman Lodge
Associated Press Staff Writer

Somewhere near Narvik, Norway (via Gallivare, Sweden) (Thursday) April 18.—British marines, fighting alongside their Norwegian Allies, have occupied Narvik, the northern ore port, and a surrounding area, and the Germans are retreating to the south.

With a driver as my guide, I made my way afoot to the outskirts of Narvik, where the British arrested me.

I ascertained the British are occupying Bjorksden, a short distance this side of the Swedish border; Oyjord, Gratanjen, three places to the north and south of Narvik; Elvegaard, Elvegaardsmoen and Harstad, the British landing point.

The British appeared to be extending their occupation.

The Germans, retreating southward, were careful to keep to the west of the Swedish border to avoid internment.

[Lodge's disclosure that the British now hold Bjorksden indicates that the Allies control the vital Narvik-Kirun ore railway, which only yesterday was reported to be in German hands, after the Nazi force, which Berlin said included two-thirds of the crews of the German destroyers sunk at Narvik harbor by British warships, had fought its way to Bjorksden.

[Berlin dispatches yesterday claimed the Germans still held Narvik and the railroad, and that the British had no more than a foothold at Harstad. The Germans also claimed to have sunk a British transport

Seizure of Islands Would 'Prejudice' Peace in the Pacific, Secretary Declares

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

The United States last night served notice on Japan that the Tokyo government—as well as all others—will be expected to keep hands off the Dutch East Indies, irrespective of war developments in Europe.

Secretary of State Hull, in a formal statement couched in firmest terms, declared that any upsetting of the status quo in the East Indies region "would be prejudicial to the cause of stability, peace and security not only in the region of The Netherlands Indies but in the entire Pacific area."

Issuance of the statement was the latest, and most striking development in a series of indications that Japan might attempt to occupy The Netherlands' possessions in Asia if The Netherlands should become involved in the European war.

Answer to "Protection"

It constituted a quick reply to Monday's statement by Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita, of Japan, which indicated that country was prepared to establish something of a protectorate over the East Indies if spread of war to that area appeared in prospect.

Secretary Hull, in effect, definitely rejected widespread Japanese claims that Japan is the "natural protector" of the Dutch East Indies through her asserted "special interest" in East Asia.

He pointed out that "the whole world" has an important interest in the commerce of that portion of the Dutch empire, that "many countries, including the United States," depend upon it for such vital products as rubber, tin, quinine, etc., and he called attention to two agreements, in both of which Japan joined, to maintain the "status quo" in the region of the Pacific.

His statement contained an implied rebuke to Japan also for her aggression in China, the Secretary commenting that "all peaceful nations" have been urging that "policies of force be abandoned" and that peace be maintained on the basis of such "fundamental principles" as "respect by every nation for the rights of other nations and non-intervention in their domestic affairs," as well as the "faithful observance of treaty pledges."

Dutch Won't Be "Protected"

Hull's action came only a few hours after The Netherlands' minister, A. Loudon, had declared that no nation would be permitted to invade The Netherlands for "protective" purposes, the reason given by Germany in most of her invasions of foreign soil.

After a half-hour conference with Undersecretary of State Welles, Minister Loudon said:

"I am in a position to state that The Netherlands government will not admit any preventive protection for any part of the country, from whatever side it may be proposed."

Officials here declined comment last night on reports from Shanghai that authorities of the British, French and American fleets took a grave view of The Netherlands Indies situation. Associated Press dispatches said those authorities felt there was a "serious possibility" of a Japanese attempt to seize that area if Germany should invade Holland. The Shanghai attitude was taken here as a natural result of Arita's statement following Monday's cabinet meeting at Tokyo.

Arita had mentioned only Japan and "other countries of East Asia"

Wallace Using Bill for Votes, Says Andresen

Backing Jones Measure In Bid for Nomination, Legislator Charges

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace is backing the Jones Farm Credit Bill as "bait for the farm vote" in a personal bid for the Presidential nomination, Representative August Andresen (Republican), of Minnesota, charged last night.

Andresen, a member of the House Agriculture Committee, described Wallace's memorandum to Farm Credit Governor A. G. Black, sent postage free to 630,000 Land Bank borrowers, as "the most desperate political move by any Cabinet officer during the 14 years I have served in Congress."

Meanwhile, the House Agriculture Committee postponed further consideration of the Jones bill until next week, amid growing indications that the controversial measure would be drastically revised or tabled. The bill has been before the committee six weeks.

Legislation Not Mentioned.

The Wallace memorandum was mailed April 10, accompanied by a letter from Black which began, "This letter probably breaks a precedent, but here goes . . ."

No pending legislation was mentioned in the Black-Wallace message, but the Secretary's memorandum advocates reduction of farm loan interest rates, Government guarantee of the land bank bonds and abolition of the present arrangement by which borrowers take 5 per cent of their loans in land bank stock. All these objectives are embodied in the Jones bill.

Andresen asserted that the communication "clearly violates" statutes forbidding Federal officials to influence legislation through mes-

Oursler Warns D. A. R. About Propaganda

The election race of eight for the posts of vice presidents general of the Daughters of the American Revolution developed more rivalry last night than had been forseen.

All eight, nominated last night, will be elected, but the highest will win three-year terms, while the eighth will only fill a vacancy of one year. Intense campaigning was waged by the State delegates to elect their candidates to the full-term posts.

Polls will be open today, and the new officials will be installed tomorrow morning.

The nominees are Mrs. William Harrison Hightower, Georgia; Mrs. Eugene Norfleet Davis, North Carolina; Mrs. Reuben Edward Knight, Nebraska; Mrs. Fred C. Morgan, Maine; Mrs. B. H. Geagley, Michigan; Miss Marion Seelye, Kansas; Mrs. Wilbur Bunnell Blakeslee, Maryland, and Mrs. Jacob Frederich Zimmerman, Illinois.

Reports of the State regents of the Daughters of the American Revolution last night formed a lengthy parade of achievement, as each of these officers stepped forward on the stage of Constitution Hall to sum up their varied Golden Jubilee projects and other activities for the Forty-ninth Continental Congress.

Debt Payment Voted

Representatives from chapters in England, China and other countries also told how they carry on D. A. R. activities at a distance.

Warning that Americans should be on their guard against propaganda, Fulton Oursler, editor of Liberty Magazine, yesterday afternoon, at the D. A. R. Congress, urged that "we do nothing suppressive, nothing that will destroy the freedom we have."

Oursler said he was not so much worried about the effect of propaganda on the American people as he was concerned about "the activities of some of our leaders who are afraid of this propaganda. These leaders show signs of having the jitters."

"I have never been afraid of the people of the United States. I have sometimes been timid of their leaders," Oursler said at the afternoon session at Constitution Hall. He

A Hint to Rome

London, April 17.—Britain's minister of economic warfare, Ronald H. Cross, declared tonight he believed that Italy wanted to be treated as a neutral, but warned her she must behave as one.

"We have no quarrel with Italy," he said, in a speech at Sheffield. We have every wish to be friends. But we are plain-dealing and plain-speaking people and we should like to know where we stand with Italy."

Cross described the strongly pro-German tone of the Italian press as "hostile."

"That makes us reflect," he said, "upon the attitude of Italy toward us."

Sees Sweden Invaded

Cross also expressed the opinion that Germany might invade Sweden within a month to get supplies of iron ore. Britain, he added, is ready to help Sweden, "but she must be ready to help herself."

London has cast anxious and hurt eyes toward Italy for several days and the Cross speech may have diplomatic repercussions, at least. But Britain is anxious to determine whether the tone of the Italian press, which is playing up German claims of victory in the north and minimizing Allied military prowess, clearly reflects the viewpoint of Mussolini or whether Mussolini has a more subtle purpose in mind for London, April 17.—In answer to Norway's urgent appeal for more help, warships of the Royal Navy raced to within a few miles of the Norwegian coast at dawn today and shelled the airport of German-occupied Stavanger.

This action marked the first time in British history that warships have been sent out specifically to shell an enemy airport; and it is only the start of a new intensified campaign to blast the Nazis out of the strategic south Norway ports.

Piloted by a Royal Air Force bomber, the warships took up their positions just at daylight. Wheeling silently over the airport, the bomber signaled action by dropping a flare which flood-lit the airport and gave

4th Maine Official Resigns as 5th Defies Governor

Augusta, Me., April 17 (U.P.).—The muddled financial status of the State of Maine assumed new complications tonight as a fourth high State official resigned and the resignation of a fifth was demanded by Gov. Barrows.

Three other State officials including Comptroller William A. Runnells, 45, hospitalized after an "accidental" shooting, have resigned during an investigation by auditors that has disclosed a shortage in State accounts of more than $70,000.

Late today Barrows requested State Treasurer Belmont Smith, 65, to tender his resignation, but Smith refused and it was said he would seek a public hearing before the Governor and council.

At the same time, the Governor announced that Finance Commissioner William S. Owens, 74, had resigned.

Woman, Once Hit-Run Victim, Drags Injured Man to Safety

A Greenbelt (Md.) woman, whose father was killed by an automobile, last night was credited by Prince Georges County police with saving the life of Roy Napper, 36, full-blooded Indian from Tulsa, Okla., after he had been run down by a hit-run driver at College Park, Md.

Police said Mrs. Esther Estes rushed to the aid of the injured man as he lay helpless on the Washington - Baltimore boulevard and dragged him from the path of approaching traffic.

Mrs. Estes told police she, herself, had been injured by a hit-run driver in Washington in 1927 and her father, William Sledge, was killed in a traffic accident in Alabama three weeks ago.

Napper, who had been living at 324 1 street southeast, told Mrs. Estes he was trying to hitch-hike back to Tulsa. He said he was a painter by trade.

At Casualty Hospital, where he was taken by the Branchville rescue squad, the Indian was said to be suffering from injuries to his ribs and hips. His condition was reported as undetermined.

Police said the automobile which struck the man bore D. C. license plates. The car's right side was damaged, they said.

Trade Board Rejects Pastor's Plea for Sex Study in Schools

Over the objection of a Presbyterian clergyman, who vainly argued that sex education should be taught in Washington's public schools, a Board of Trade committee yesterday adopted a resolution embracing a contrary attitude.

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A., retired, and the Rev. J. Herbert Garner, pastor of Sixth Presbyterian Church, were central figures in the debate which featured the April meeting of the trade board's committee on public schools.

While frowning on the introduction of a sex education course in the school system, the Fries resolution provides that doctors shall address junior and senior high school pupils from time to time on "certain diseases," if boys and girls are divided into separate listening groups.

The retired general did not say what these "certain diseases" are but members of the committee, voting on his resolution, presumed he meant syphilis and gonorrhea.

"The proper kind of sex education, presented by a thoroughly qualified, spiritually minded teacher, should be given not later than in the first year of senior high

CASE OF SPLIT PERSONALITY

(Imaginary chat, while shaving, between Jim Farley, the Democratic Chairman, and Mr. James Aloysius Farley, one of the Democratic candidates.)

JIM: Begorra, it's a fine array of candidates we're parading!

JAMES: Really? I've only noticed one or two that amount to much.

Harlan Miller

JIM: Why, we're strong from end to end, from Bankhead to Wheeler!

• • • •

JIM: As National Chairman, I'm impartial.

JAMES: But as a candidate myself, phooey on impartiality.

• • • •

JIM: Well, take Bob Jackson. What's wrong with him?

JAMES: What's he ever been elected to? Just an upstart, a White House pet.

JIM: As chairman, I'm impartial. McNutt is okay, too.

JAMES: He might carry Indiana. Glamour boy. Too ambitious.

JIM: I can't be prejudiced. Wheeler's a fine candidate, too.

JAMES: Some people think so. Hasn't he got the C. I. O. brand?

"—Jim and James argue it out"

JIM: Wheeler has strong support, though. What's wrong with Hull?

JAMES: What's right with him? His trade pacts are a millstone around his neck.

JIM: Now, don't say a word against Cordell. He's a great liberal. Has everybody's confidence.

JAMES: But you wouldn't mind being his Vice President, eh?

JIM: Don't get personal . . . Well, take Garner. He'd reunite the party.

JAMES: Same answer. You'd like to run for Vice President on a ticket with him, and you know it.

• • • •

JIM: That's no answer. Somebody's got to be Vice President . . . All right, Dr. Jekyll, what have you got against Henry Wallace?

JAMES: That ex-Republican? You're not so enthusiastic about him yourself, Mr. Hyde.

JIM: He's got more on the ball than those Republican candidates, anyhow.

JAMES: You're talking like a politician, Jim. Why don't you try to be a statesman for a while?

JIM: I'm just as much of a statesman as you are . . . A statesman is just a politician's Charlie McCarthy . . . Look at young Bill Douglas. He could beat Tom Dewey at his own glamour game.

JAMES: Douglas is handicapped. He's been a Justice of the Supreme Court but never a county attorney.

"—they can agree on one man"

JIM: Well, there's always Roosevelt; he's our best vote-getter. When you get down to brass tacks, it's dangerous to underestimate the Republican candidates.

JAMES: You know how the country and I feel about a third term. Sometimes I suspect you feel the same way yourself.

JIM: Well, way down deep I hope he doesn't want a third term. He knows all the arguments against it.

• • • •

JAMES: Haven't you got any other candidates tucked away?

JAMES: Farley? Farley? You don't mean Jim Farley?

JIM: Yes, that's the one; James Aloysius Farley. Honest, able patriotic, a man without an enemy in the world. The kind of a candidate a National Chairman can get in there and pitch for.

JAMES: Now you're talking! A man after my own heart. I knew you and I could get together on somebody, if we talked it out.

JIM: Yes, you and I have a lot of interests in common. We chairmen and candidates must stick together. Farley it is, then. I run into a lot of sentiment for him wherever I go, and maybe I ought to encourage it.

U. S. Problems Are at Home, Dewey Holds

Record of New Deal Is One of 'Blithely Casting Pledges Aside'

By the Associated Press

Oklahoma City, April 17.—"The primary problems which face us are at home," Thomas E. Dewey, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, said tonight, adding they "c[illegible] and must be [illegible]."

"But there is still another inescapable issue that confronts us," the New York district attorney continued in an address prepared for a Republican rally. "We must make secure our peace in a war-torn world. In that we have one great source of strength—we as a Nation are united in our determination to stay out of war.

"We must have an administration in Washington which not only shares in this determination, but is competent to see it through. We must have an administration in which the country can place its full faith. . . .

No Temporizing Possible

"The pledge to keep the nation out of war is one which admits of no temporizing. It can be accepted only from men who have kept their pledged word in the past and will keep their pledged word in the future.

"The record of the New Deal is a record of covenants abandoned, pledges blithely cast aside.

"On the basis of that record, we as Americans must conclude that in the emergency of a world again at war, the destiny of the Nation would be safer in other hands."

The Presidential aspirant said his greatest amazement on recent trips over the country has been the "unlimited perversity of the New Dealers.

"They are still insisting that this country has run its course—that America is finished.

"War on Business" Cited

He summarized results of what he termed the "New Deal war on business" as driving "private investment into cyclone cellars until the New Deal twister has passed."

In agriculture, New Deal policies sought to limit production, "yet we have record breaking harvest;" the New Deal sought parity of prices, yet "most agricultural products are far below the level of parity as defined in the triple A law;" it set out to restore farm income, "yet the farmers' share of the national income . . . has been less than in any other seven years of our history.

"It is perfectly clear from the failure of the New Deal efforts that one of the essential steps to bring about farm parity is to adopt policies which will increase the demand for farm products. To do that we must encourage the expansion of industry and the reemployment of workers. This will create increased demand for agricultural products."

He recommended as specific measures to "bring a better balance of our whole economy": Crop loans at reasonable levels; a program of soil conservation "which is not a subterfuge for crop control;" Government-sponsored research to broaden the use of agricultural products; and preservation of the American market for Americans.

Denies Pension Program

Dewey said in an interview that a move in Massachusetts to tie a pension tail to his political kite was "wholly without any authorization from me." He had been told that William H. McMasters announced at Boston yesterday he was indorsing Dewey and entering a slate of old-age pension candidates in Massachusetts Presidential primary April 30.

"I have never met McMasters," Dewey snapped, "and his action is wholly without any authorization from me."

The district attorney said he would have plenty to say about pensions in an address Saturday at Los Angeles.

Morgenstierne expressed the royal gratitude for the city's reception of the Crown Prince and Princess of Norway last summer.

of Mr. Dewey. He is being supported in this State by all factions and it is quite probable that there will be no contest."

Previously, Galen L. Tait, former international revenue collector in Baltimore, was the only prominent Maryland Republican who had publicly declared his support for Dewey.

Meanwhile, the Maryland Republican State Central Committee set May 18 as the date for the party's State convention following the May 6 primary. The State's primary law is regarded as binding the delegation chosen at the convention to support the preferential primary choice.

In the Democratic preconvention tussle fresh signs of third term movement activity were apparent on a wide front.

Kramer Calls at White House

In North Carolina, it was learned, "draft Roosevelt" leaders have been active in an effort to win that State's Democratic delegation for the President after their first complimentary "favorite son" ballot for Gov. Clyde R. Hoey. The delegation had been regarded as safe for Secretary of State Hull.

In Washington, Representative Kramer (Democrat), of California, supporting California's "draft Roosevelt" slate, called at the White House. Afterward Kramer declared everything was "harmonious" in California's third-term drive and that the reelection of the President would be "duck soup." A day earlier, another California third-term advocate, Representative Voorhis, had conferred with the President.

In Texas, the third term movement was still driving against Vice President Garner's native son bid, despite reported disapproval of the President and House Majority Leader Rayburn's plea for Garner support. Undersecretary of Interior Alvin Wirtz, a third term advocate, was reported heading for Texas late this week. The Texas State convention meets at Waco, May 28.

The Democratic National Committee, meanwhile, perfected plans for campaign accent on the feminine vote. Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, director of the Women's division of the committee, appointed Hazel B. Reavis, of New York, publicity director for the division. Mrs. Reavis, former Associated Press writer, is the wife of the late Smith Reavis, also Associated Press, who was credited with inspiring the Kellogg-Briand pact.

Dewey's challenge to Taft to meet him in Maryland struck at the Ohio Senator's previously advanced reason's for not entering other primaries—his Senate duties in Washington. Taft has said recently that if he entered a primary race with Dewey, it would be in such neighboring States as Maryland and West Virginia. The Ohioan himself challenged Dewey to enter West Virginia, and had a petition drawn ready for filing there when the deadline expired.

But when a Taft slate recently was filed in New Jersey, conceded Dewey territory, without Taft permission, the Ohio Senator quickly demanded and obtained its withdrawal.

Only 16 delegates are involved in Maryland, and Taft managers already have been claiming more than 300 elsewhere.

G.O.P. Changes Rule to Select D. C. Delegates

Suffrage Leader Brands Committee's Action 'Outrageous'

By James D. Secrest

Washington's political pot was boiling last night in spite of the disfranchisement of its residents as members of the Republican State central committee clashed over action taken by the committee.

William H. Mondell, vice president of the District Suffrage Association, struck the first blow when he disclosed before a subcommittee of the Senate District Committee that the local Republican group had adopted at a meeting Tuesday night new rules for the selection of delegates to the party convention.

Characterizing the G. O. P. committee's action as "outrageous," Mondell said that it provided additional reasons for the passage of the Capper bill to set up machinery for the election of District national committeemen and delegates to political party conventions.

No Money for Primary

James C. Wilkes, chairman of the Republican State central committee, insisted that there was nothing irregular in the committee's action and that the new plan for registration was intended to give party members additional protection if they wished to vote.

Wilkes said that the committee had no money to hold a primary and that the system of registration was designed to "give protection to Republicans who want to vote" for District's G. O. P. delegates to the Philadelphia convention.

Mondell asserted that for the first time in recent years the committee had decided to require registration in person and complained that by setting up only one place of registration that it would discourage party members from signing up for the precinct elections.

Although a member of the Republican State committee, Mondell was not present at the Tuesday meeting.

Registration Date Set

The committee had announced the registrations may be made from noon to 7 p. m., April 19 to 24, inclusive, in committee's headquarters at Room 702, Second National Bank Building, 1331-33 G street northwest.

"In addition," Wilkes said, "there will be 43 precinct chairmen, who will arrange for precinct meetings in each of the precincts and enrollments may also be made through precinct chairmen."

Every four years caucuses are held in 43 precincts to select delegates to the State committee, and these 43 delegates in turn elect 43 delegates at large. The 86 delegates for the State committee, which picks delegates and alternates to the Republican convention.

Different versions of the committee's action with respect to the authorization given the chairman and a special committee to redefine the Republican precinct boundaries likewise came from Mondell and Wilkes.

Mondell Calls Action "Vicious"

Mondell said that the committee, in effect, had authorized the chairman to "gerrymander" the District after registrations had been closed. The authority, he said, was "vicious" whether it is used or not. Candidates, he pointed out, would have no assurance that their own precincts or those of their friends might not be altered.

"The same authority is given the chairman every four years," Wilkes countered, "and changes are made of necessity when residential conditions are changed by reason of economic developments."

Wilkes denied Mondell's implication that there was anything secretive about Tuesday night's meeting. Three-day notices by mail were sent out, he said, and a majority of the members of the State committee was present.

The committee authorized the holding of precinct elections May 1 to 4, inclusive, and set May 16 as the date for organization of the new committee. The State convention will be held May 18.

Hearing Recessed

"Neither the executive committee meeting nor the meeting of the full State committee was executive or closed," said Wilkes, "nor was any attempt made to restrict anyone from discussing anything which took place at either of the meetings."

Mondell explained to the Senate subcommittee that he had received his notice Sunday but too late to cancel another engagement for Tuesday night.

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, who conducted yesterday's hearing on the Capper bill, expressed interest in Mondell's disclosures. After hearing a half dozen witnesses, he recessed the hearing. Another hearing will be held, he said, before the inquiry is closed.

Evan H. Tucker, president of the Northeast Washington Citizens Association, suggested that action on the Capper bill at this time would be inopportune because of the nearness of the political conventions.

Witnesses who spoke in favor of the bill included Mrs. Clara Wright Smith, William C. Lee, of the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association, and H. L. Coleman, of the Northwest Citizens Council.

Pile of Disputed Debris on WPA Wrecking Job Blamed for 2-Alarm Fire Near Schools

Flames leap high from the unoccupied apartment house at Fifteenth and Lamont street northwest. As WPA workers engaged in razing the structure ate lunch, the two-alarm blaze started to sweep through the building in its own destructive way

A pile of inflammable debris, object of a bitter dispute between citizens and the fire marshal and building inspector's office for several weeks, was blamed yesterday for a two-alarm fire opposite the Powell Junior High and Johnson schools in the 1500 block of Lamont street northwest.

A row of 12 brick houses in the block is being demolished by WPA workers to make space for a new playground. The blaze started, according to investigators, in a heap of wood and plaster on the side porch of a house at 1501. Only two families remain in the block—at 1511 and 1515. Their homes, along with the others, have been sold to the District. The fire was confined to the one building.

The flames were discovered by workers during lunch hour and had gained rapid headway before first fire engines arrived. By the time a second alarm was sounded, the fire was raging through three floors of the half-razed structure.

The excitement provided an extra recess period for youngsters in the two schools.

"Gross Negligence" Charged

Origin of the fire was a mystery. Some residents of the neighborhood expressed indignation at what they described a "gross negligence" in permitting the inflammable material to remain piled close to the buildings.

Since the demolition work was started more than a month ago, J. G. Hughes, of 1511 Lamont street, said he has made repeated calls to the fire marshal and building inspector, protesting against hazards created by heaped-up debris.

"I was told the building inspector could do nothing about it because it was a WPA job," said Hughes. "We can't move for several weeks and my family has lived in constant dread of fire."

Mrs. Marie M. Ready, who occupied a house at 1503 Lamont until last Saturday, said she moved out six weeks before her limit because she "was afraid to stay there."

Pleaded With Workmen

"I called the fire marshal's office, but they told me they didn't have an inspector to send out. I pleaded with workmen not to pile the wood and debris so close to the buildings, but they just laughed at me," Mrs. Ready said.

Mrs. Lily Keenan, who runs a boarding house at 1515, said plaster and splintered wood was heaped on her front porch by workmen demolishing the house next door at 1513.

"I am not supposed to get out for three more weeks," she said, "but believe me I'm not going to stay here any longer than I have to."

All three families said it had been necessary to call police on several occasions because of children playing in the vacant houses and the fear they might start a fire.

Donald Hipkins, of the chief clerk's office of the building inspector's department, said last night the Lamont street razing was a Federal project "over which we have no jurisdiction."

"There was no permit issued for the work," Hipkins said. "There is nothing we can do to make the Federal Government take out a permit for such a project. In fact, we have nothing at all to do with the work."

At the fire marshal's office, Acting Sergt. R. C. Roberts said, "people are always complaining about demolition work, but we can't do a thing."

"You can't raze a building without making a mess," he said, speaking in the absence of Fire Marshal Calvin Lauber. "They've got to dump the debris somewhere. They are, however, supposed to remove it as soon as possible."

Both Hughes and Mrs. Ready said the pile of lumber, laths and plaster in which the fire started had been heaped against the building since the work began.

At height of the fire, flames could be seen for several blocks. Extra details of police were called to control the crowds, and traffic in the vicinity was jammed for more than an hour.

Dewey Calls Washington a 'Boom Town;' 'He Doesn't Know Facts,' D. C. Leaders Retort

From a front in Oklahoma City, Thomas E. Dewey, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, last night fired his heavy campaign guns at Washington, and immediately aroused a furious counterattack on behalf of the city's voteless citizens.

Washington is a "boom town" where "the Administration has spent millions of dollars" to provide the employes "with monumental offices," the gang-busting district attorney was quoted as saying in his Oklahoma campaign drive.

"I'm afraid Mr. Dewey doesn't know much about Washington—yet," tersely responded Commissioner John Russell Young, Washington native and former newspaperman.

"A boom town?" scoffed Harry S. Wender, vice president of the Federation of Citizens Association. "If so, then Washington has been booming since its founding more than 100 years ago."

Dewey, District leaders insisted, didn't know the facts.

After characterizing Washington as a "boom town," Dewey made the following assertions, according to Associated Press:

"The number of Government employes has been increased from 570,000 to 940,000 during the last seven years.

"The Administration has spent millions of dollars to provide these employes with monumental offices. From those offices the chieftains of the New Deal conduct operations which throttle the country's business with one hand, and with the other spend billions of dollars in an attempt to fill the economic vacuum which they themselves have created.

"The time has come to make a swap. I propose that we give up New Deal spending for spending by our people.

"I propose that we give up the prosperity of a Washington bureaucracy for the prosperity of a Nation."

Informed of Dewey's statement, a Civil Service Commission official was quick to point out that the figures presented by the New York prosecutor, while substantially correct, overlooked the fact that seven times as many Federal workers were stationed outside of the District as were employed in it.

The official referred to the commission's semiannual review of Federal employment, released last month, which shows that of 932,305 Government workers, as of December 31, 1939, but 126,345 were attached to Washington bureaus, with 805,960 spread throughout the Nation. On December 31, 1932, there were 568,345 Federal workers; 66,302 in Washington, 502,043 in the field.

The Civil Service Commission statement significantly observed that the relative number of persons employed by the Federal Government in 1939 was not so great as in certain earlier years when the Nation's population was smaller. The proportion of population employed in the executive branch of the Government for 1939 was seven-tenths of 1 per cent.

Federal level of wages, the commission official declared, has been the same since 1930, when a slight increase was made.

"Dewey's statement is misleading," remarked Lawrence E. Williams, president of the Board of Trade. "One gets the idea that all the 940,000 are employed here.

"As to Washington being a boom city, that just is not so. Because of the regularity of employment, we have neither waves of prosperity nor periods of depression and suffering. The city fortunately has no need of booms."

Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers of America, said:

"Mr. Dewey is a little bit mixed up about services rendered by Federal employes within the past seven years, services useful to the Nation," declared Baker.

"These services range through finance, unemployment relief, aid to farmers and regulatory problems. It was necessary for the Government to meet the problems which were there. The Government has done a pretty good job at it.

"If Dewey has any idea that those problems can be avoided, then we would like to know how he intends to avoid them."

Wender laughed at the idea that Washington was considered a boom town.

U. S. Editors To Hear Welles And Roosevelt

Off-the-Record Sessions Are on 2-Day Meeting Program of Society

Exclusive stories which may never get into print may be uncovered today or tomorrow by leading editors gathered at the eighteenth annual convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

The convention opens at 10 a. m. today in the National Press Club, with one of the most important features of the program being off-the-record talks with President Roosevelt and Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles.

Reached at the Willard yesterday, Donald J. Sterling, the Journal, Portland, Oreg., president of the society, said he expected the meeting to be the most important in the group's history "in view of the changing trend in domestic and international affairs."

New Problems to Face

He said the group would be faced with new problems in safeguarding the freedom of the press. "Freedom of the press," he said, "is the bulwark of democracy. It should be regarded as a liberty to be cherished and not as a license to be exploited even by the newspaper."

The Roosevelt session at 8:30 p. m. in the White House, though it may not bring out the question directly, may give the editors a chance to outguess their reporters as to which way the wind is blowing on the third-term issue. Of no less significance will be the 3 p. m. discussion with Sumner Welles at the State Department.

"Shop talk" concerning mutual problems of the fourth estate will comprise an important part of the program today and tomorrow, with much of the discussion being carried from the floor in free-for-all fashion. Today's shop talk luncheon will be in the Willard Hotel on "Feature Problems and Angles," led by George B. Armstead, of the Hartford Courant. Eleven prepared talks by editors whose names are nationally known will contribute to today's discussions.

Meyer to Entertain Group

A social evening will wind up the first day's session at the home of Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post, who will entertain in his Crescent place home exclusively for members, their wives, and daughters.

Three of the five founding fathers of the society, which began in Chicago in February, 1922, are expected to attend. They are: Casper S. Yost of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Charles H. Dennis, editor emeritus of the Chicago Daily News, and Edward S. Beck, assistant to the editor-in-chief of the Chicago Tribune.

Today's program will open with an invocation at 10 a. m. by the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., chaplain of the House. It will be followed by an address of welcome by Richard Wilson, of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, president of the Press Club.

Reports of various committees will precede the luncheon shop talk at the Willard Hotel at 12:15 p. m. Dr. George Gallup, director, American Institute of Public Opinion, will be among the 11 speakers who will lead a free-for-all discussion of features, polls and syndicate practices at the luncheon.

Business Editors To Meet Diplomats

Foreign commercial relationships between the United States and countries affected by the war will be discussed today by a group representing the National Conference of Business Paper Editors and several European and South American diplomats.

The editors will meet with Count de Saint-Quentin, French Ambassador; Felipe A. Espil, the Argentine Ambassador, and Carlos Martins, of the Brazilian Embassy. J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, will address the group at luncheon, and Representative Howard W. Smith, chairman of the special House committee investigating the labor board, will be dinner speaker. The luncheon and dinner meetings will be at the Willard Hotel.

Defense Grills FBI Agent In Plot Trial

Healy Acknowledges Father Was a Spy For British in Eire

By the Associated Press

New York, April 17.—Denis Healy, chief prosecution witness against 16 men on trial for seditious conspiracy to overthrow the United States Government, acknowledged today that his father had been a British secret agent in Ireland and said he himself still had many friends in "various agencies" of the empire.

Under all-day cross-examination by first one and then another of a sarcastic corps of defense attorneys, the witness—a spy for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who associated with the accused plotters only to inform against them—persistently failed to clear up much of the mystery surrounding his own background.

As to the facts of his birth he knew, he said, only that it was "somewhere in the British Empire," and wasn't sure whether his father's name was Donald Thomas or Thomas Donald. He conceded, too, that there were several discrepancies in various signed documents relating to his age and place of birth.

Just One Dog, Court Orders; Nature Dissents

Woman Got Rid Of Other 9; Now Last Is Expecting

In deference to a Police Court order, Miss Helen Burche, of 2027 H street northwest, sat at home last night with Snow White, only remaining dog of a pack that had numbered at times as many as ten.

"I guess I'll have to be satisfied," she declared, "though I love my little pets." There was a catch in her throat, for she had just returned from Judge John P. McMahon's courtroom, where she had been placed on probation for six months and limited to the companionship of only one dog.

Yesterday's court appearance, her fourth because of dogs, was to report to the judge that she had disposed of Ranger, Peaches and "the little puppy," three of the four reasons why she was haled into court by neighbors on a charge of maintaining a nuisance.

April 10, Judge McMahon told Miss Burche she would have to get ride of her dogs. She pleaded and was granted permission of the Court to keep Snow White, but was told to return yesterday to report her progress on the "animal housecleaning."

Ranger and Peaches were sent to the District Pound, the Court was told, while the puppy was given to a friend who lives out of the city. Miss Burche said she still had Snow White.

It was at this point that Judge McMahon was informed that Snow White was expecting a litter.

"I can't stop the dog from having puppies," the judge said. "But Miss Burche will have to exercise the proper confinement of the dogs when the litter arrives or we will be forced to bring her back to court and impose some kind of punishment."

Surety Company Gets $73,667 Judgment Here

The American Surety Co., New York, yesterday obtained a District Court judgement for $73,667.25 against Walter E. Keens, 51, former teller who, on May 4, 1934, was sentenced to 18 to 24 months in the penitentiary for embezzlement from the District National Bank.

The bank had about $7,000,000 in deposits when it failed to open after the 1933 bank holiday. The surety company claimed that it was required to repay $73,667.25, which was taken by Koons.

Rumania Sends More Troops To Bessarabia

Moscow Reported Pushing Transfer Of Finnish Veterans

By the Associated Press

Bucharest, April 17.—Reliable reports reaching here tonight said Rumania and Russia had reached a tentative agreement to retire their armies 10 kilometers (6¼ miles) from their common frontier.

Additional Rumanian regiments entrained for Bessarabia today, and diplomatists said Russian Premier Molotoff has asked the Rumanian minister in Moscow about his government's attitude toward Russia's "right" to regain this province, which went to Rumania in the post-World War settlement.

Informed quarters understood that Russia was pushing the transfer of veteran troops from the former Finnish front to the Bessarabian frontier.

Ships Near Dardenelles

Meanwhile, warships of five powers maneuvered under secret orders within striking distance of the Dardanelles tonight as the small neutral nations of southeastern Europe reinforced their defenses and moved to stamp out Nazi influences within their borders.

Allied naval units off the Greek coast were reported to have taken "counter measures" after the Italian fleet assembled in the Aegean for what Italy has called "customary spring maneuvers." The nature of the counter measures was not disclosed.

Part of the Turkish fleet took up positions in the Sea of Marmora near Gallipoli, where, in the last war, the Turks broke a great British assault.

Neutral shipping men reported the Russian navy already had laid hundreds of mines and was busy laying more in the Black Sea off Odessa and Batum.

Replies to Nazi Threat

Rumania has put her navy in full control of Black Sea and Danube ports, replying to a Nazi threat to send German gunboats down the river to protect German traffic.

Rumanian authorities announced also that war industries will be moved from vulnerable border areas to the interior, where there is less danger from air attacks.

The Rumanian Senate provisionally accepted a government bill to give Germany a 30-year lease on almost 100,000 acres of timberlands in central Rumania, despite testimony of army experts that the vast forest reserves constituted a natural defense line and that such action would jeopardize national security.

Newspapers in Balkan countries headlined dispatches asserting "Italy's hour for decision is near." German quarters in Bucharest said openly Italy is prepared to enter the war on the side of Germany.

Rumania in Peril

Informed sources consider Rumania the most endangered of the Balkan neutrals because of her great petroleum and agricultural resources. These quarters said Rumania is on the verge of aligning herself with the Near East defense system formed by the Allies and Turkey. They said further that Rumanian staff officers have established contact at Ankara with Turkish strategists.

Many Rumanians expressed the fear the Allies' preoccupation with Norway may encourage Russia to risk a quick aggressive adventure in southeastern Europe.

Others, however, believed British envoys returning to their Balkan posts after conferences in London will bring new assurances of full Allied support against attack from any quarter. The Allies already have given formal pledges to Rumania of help in the event of aggression.

Spy Chief Shot

Bucharest was puzzled by the announcement that Ion Morusow, chief of the army's counter-espionage and chief of the palace police, has suffered an unexplained gunshot wound in the stomach.

Police measures to break up a suspected network of German undercover agents in southeastern Europe were underway in Rumania, Yugoslavia, Turkey and Bulgaria.

Yugoslav authorities estimated that one-third of the 50,000 foreigners in the country will be expelled, including more than 1,000 employes of German travel bureaus and industrial agencies.

Accusations were openly aired in Belgrade that the German "visitors" are spreadnig propaganda and spying out military objectives.

Air raid drills have been organized in the major Yugoslav towns along the Adriatic facing Italy and near the German border.

Bans Phone Talks

Yugoslavia banned international telephone communications from small Yugoslav towns on the German border and conducted widespread police raids on the homes of Germans suspected of being secret Nazi agents in order to forestall any "fifth column" activity such as aided the invasion of Norway.

Strong German troop concentrations were reported at Graz—formerly in independent Austria and not far from the Yugoslav frontier.

The executive council of the International Danube Commission—composed of representatives of Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Hungary, Slovakia, Germany, Britain, France and Italy—took action regarded as a setback for German demands.

The council recommended that Rumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Hungary police their own territorial waters, and that the Iron Gate on the Danube frontier of Rumania and Yugoslavia be closed to cement, ore and other heavy shipments.

Germany wants to police the Danube with her own gunboats in order to prevent "British sabotage."

Hull Warns Japan, Other Nations to Keep Hands Off Dutch Indies

as having a close interest in the Netherlands' Asiatic possessions, chiefly Sumatra, Java and Borneo, a point that Secretary Hull was quick to correct.

Affects Both Hemispheres

Arita said any change in the status quo of the Dutch East Indies "would give rise to an undesirable situation from the standpoint of peace and stability in East Asia." Hull pointed out that the effect would be felt throughout the Pacific region, not only in East Asia.

Arita's statement was openly declared by Yakichiro Suma, spokesman of the Tokyo Foreign Office, to be "a prelude to action by Japan, as we do not want to see the Dutch East Indies go into allen hands." The Tokyo press discussed the possibility of "naval action," the Japan Times remarking that if the "powers" failed to show themselves "in complete understanding" with Japan, then Japan "might have to act without an understanding with anybody."

Secretary Hull's statement follows in full:

"I have noted with interest the statement by the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs expressing concern on the part of the Japanese government for the maintenance of the status quo of the Netherlands Indies.

"Any change in the status of the Netherlands Indies would directly affect the interests of many countries.

"The Netherlands Indies are very important in the international relationships of the whole Pacific Ocean. The islands themselves extend for a distance of approximately 3,200 miles east and west astride of the equator, from the Indian Ocean, on the west, far into the Pacific Ocean, on the east. They are also an important factor in the commerce of the whole world. They produce considerable portions of the world's supplies of important essential commodities, such as rubber, tin, quinine, copra, etc. Many countries, including the United States, depend substantially upon them for some of these commodities.

"Intervention in the domestic affairs of the Netherlands Indies or any alteration of their status quo by other than peaceful processes would be prejudicial to the cause of stability, peace and security not only in the region of the Netherlands Indies but in the entire Pacific area.

"This conclusion, based on a doctrine which has universal application and for which the United States unequivocally stands, is embodied in notes exchanged on November 30, 1908, between the United States and Japan in which each of the two governments stated that its policy was directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the region of the Pacific Ocean. It is reaffirmed in the notes which the United States, the British Empire, France and Japan—as parties to the treaty signed at Washington on December 13, 1921, relating to their insular possessions and their insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean—sent to the Netherlands government on February 4, 1922, in which each of those governments declared that "it is firmly resolved to respect the rights of the Netherlands in relation to their insular possessions in the region of the Pacific Ocean."

"All peaceful nations have during recent years been earnestly urging that policies of force be abandoned and that peace be maintained on the basis of fundamental principles, among which are respect by every nation for the rights of other nations and nonintervention in their domestic affairs, the according of equality of fair and just treatment, and the faithful observance of treaty pledges, with modification thereof, when needful, by orderly processes.

"It is the constant hope of the Government of the United States—as it is no doubt that of all peacefully inclined governments—that the attitudes and policies of all governments will be based upon these principles and that these principles will be applied not only in every part of the Pacific area, but also in every part of the world."

Japan's Attitude

The Arita statement had read:

With the South Seas region, and especially the Dutch East Indies, Japan is economically bound by an intimate relationship of mutuality in ministering to one another's needs. Similarly, other countries of East Asia maintain close economic relations with these regions. That is to say, Japan, those countries and these regions are contributing to the prosperity of East Asia through mutual aid and interdependence.

Should the hostilities in Europe be extended to the Netherlands and produce repercussions in the Dutch East Indies, it would not only interfere with the maintenance and furtherance of the above named relations of economic interdependence and co-existence and co-prosperity but would also give rise to an undesirable situation from the standpoint of peace and stability in East Asia.

In view of these considerations, the Japanese government cannot but be deeply concerned over any development accompanying the aggravation of the war in Europe that may affect the status quo of the Dutch East Indies.

000,000. He has indorsed the House-approved measure as "the minimum necessary," while urging action now on the longer range $3,600,000 program.

Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, asked Stark if the Navy would be willing to trim its program if peace is declared.

"Only if we could have a disarmament conference," he answered. "If we could get a conference and I thought the other fellow would live up to it, I would be perfectly delighted. In view of the experience of the past, we should be abreast of the others from the start."

Commenting on the war and future naval building, Stark made the following points:

Future battleships probably will be at least 40,000 tons, while ships ranging from that size to 70,000 tons have been "under exhaustive study" in the Navy for six months.

Germany should not have much trouble maintaining communications with Norway, it being "only a hop, skip and jump" across from Denmark.

Fighting Rages On 4 Sectors Of Norway

British Circle Narvik; Germans Advance For Fight at Namsos

By Harold Callender

Copyright by New York Times

Stockholm, April 17.—The military map of Norway tonight was divided into four sections as yet unconnected—with fighting of varying style and intensity reported from each sector.

These four sectors, roughly, are:

1. Narvik, in the far north, where British forces have begun to seize the narrowest bit of Norwegian territory.

2. Trondheim, 400 miles south of Narvik, where 2,000 German troops which now hold the second of Norway's four railways into Sweden were believed advancing northward to meet an Allied force reported without confirmation to have landed at Namsos, 80 miles north of Trondheim. Norwegian forces were reported resisting the Germans at Seinkjer, some 30 miles southeast of Namsos.

3. Southwest Norway, where British cruisers today shelled the German airport, while British planes moved up to attack the Trondheim field.

4. Southeast Norway, where the Norwegian command today admitted loss of the Oestfold territory between Oslo Fjord and Sweden, and where retreating Norwegian forces apparently had lost both of the other two railways to Sweden, thus giving Germans control of all Norway's rail links with her neighbor.

The German forces today spread out from their two main points of operation—mopping up from Oslo southward in Oestfold, moving north and west in Hadeland and east toward Elverum and strengthening their line from Trondheim eastward to the Swedish frontier.

In the south the Norwegian government admits that a force under Gen. Ericcitsen crossed into Sweden, so that the southeastern portion of Norwegian territory, called Oestfold, seems in German hands. The Germans say they expect to occupy Elverum tomorrow and that the Norwegian government has fled from that place. But on both shores of Mjosa Lake the Norwegians claim still to be holding their positions, while in Hadeland the Norwegians have retreated to new positions and concede successes to the Germans in Bagnagal.

The Germans evidently are trying to dig in at Trondheim to check a possible Allied force moving southward. It is agreed by observers here that the capture of Trondheim by the Allies will be difficult, since the forts there are held by the Germans. On the other hand, the German force in the Trondheim region has as yet no link with the southern German forces, and apparently must get supplies solely by air.

Must Cut Off Sea

The Allied task, it seems, is the double one of cutting off the German sea communications below Oslo and advancing southward from Namsos, Trondheim or possibly Molde, along one of two narrow mountain valleys connecting the Oslo region with the north central coast.

Foreign observers here believe that to dislodge the Germans from either Trondheim or the south will be a difficult and probably prolonged operation.

British naval forces appear to have destroyed the German warships in the north and to have occupied Narvik harbor and town, though isolated German units remain in the adjoining hills.

The value of Narvik to the British is considered to be mainly that it bars German access to Sweden by that route, while at the same time it would enable the British to move into northern Sweden fairly rapidly if the Germans entered southern Sweden to protect their communications with Norway.

"The pro-British cliques are making a last desperate attempt at misusing King Haakon's name to throw dirt on the German army, especially the air force, which is fighting strictly according to international law."

Advices to the Swedish newspaper Dagens Nyheter said the Germans occupied the fortresses of Oskar Fjord and Droebak, on Oslo Fjord during the day, and placed them "in the highest state of defense preparedness," in anticipation of Allied attempts to force the fjord.

The Germans then engaged in practice firing of their 28-centimeter guns.

Norway's Little Prince—Will He Have a Throne?

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS.

When these pictures were recently made, Prince Harald, 3-year-old son of Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha, of Norway, was playing happily in the snow at Skaugum Castle, near Oslo. Since then, the war in his country has veiled the whereabouts of the little prince. His mother was reported to have crossed into Sweden a week ago and presumably he and his two sisters were with her. His father and grandfather, King Haakon, still in Norway, have been dodging German bombs

Britain Starts Alien Seizure To Balk Attack

Roundup Is Inspired By Nazi, Soviet Tactics Of Boring From Within

By the United Press

London, April 17.—Britain today began a nation-wide roundup of enemy aliens and started surveillance of pacifist agitators in an effort to prevent any Nazi "fifth column" from fighting Britain from within.

The treachery which aided Germany quickly to overrun Norway suddenly awakened Britons to this danger. It was beginning to appear that the mysterious "secret weapon" of which Adolf Hitler often has boasted comprises a combination of German agents and pacifist or Communist natives of the victim country.

Victory in modern war depends as much on breaking the will of the attacked people to rerist as upon military blows. Hitler, a thorough believer in the efficacy of psychological attack, used the "Trojan Horse" tactics of infiltration to pave the way for Nazi invasion of Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark and Norway.

A home office order effective yesterday prescribed scores of "prohibited areas" throughout the British Isles. Today Scotland Yard detectives and police began rounding up all aliens in these areas, particularly from ports and areas near barracks, training camps, air centers and munitions works.

Twelve regional tribunals set up some time ago began investigating the cases of some 26,000 aliens still outside concentration camps—where only 569 have been imprisoned since the war started—and of pacifists, cranks, German students and members of various stop-the-war groups, including church bodies and intellectual groups as well as known Fascists and Communists.

The British press, now thoroughly conscious of Nazi infiltration methods, reported that hundreds of German "tourist youths of distinctive appearance and military bearing" were seeping into Hungary, Rumania and Jugoslavia.

It was suggested that other "Seiss-Inquarts, Henleins or Quislings" would appear as did these Nazi leaders in Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Norway, suddenly to take over strategic points while the German army hits the borders.

The British press, and the public through letters to the newspapers, have been protesting bitterly for months against the leniency presently shown compared with 1914 when 60,000 aliens were interned in the early days of the war.

Authorities are trying to trace the funds of various peace and pacifist organizations, suspicious that they come either from Berlin or Moscow.

Reporter Finds British in Narvik, Nazis Fleeing

carrying 1,200 troops in the Harstad area. Editor's note.]

When I was arrested by the British troops I displayed my passport and was given my freedom. But it was short-lived.

As I left Narvik to attempt a survey of the surrounding towns I again was picked up and turned over to the Norse military authorities.

The Norwegians took me back to Narvik because my visa was not stamped for regular passage over the border, and ordered me to return to the south.

During the escorted trip to the border I saw several German patrols in the distance, about 5 miles from the Swedish line, and also scattered Norwegian troops.

But I arrived unmolested at Kiruna, Swedish iron mine town.

With more than 250 Norse troops, who crossed the border and were interned, I was held under guard in Kiruna until a train left and then was placed in charge of the conductor who was ordered not to let me off until we reached Vaunnas.

Aliens Ordered Out

Fourteen Norwegian wounded were in the group crossing the border. The Norwegians told me the Germans lost little time in starting their retreat when they heard the British were arriving. But they drove the small Norwegian force before them, engaging in skirmishes now and then.

Westbound trains which formerly ran to Narvik now go only as far as Kiruna.

All foreigners have been ordered from the territory, including foreign journalists, with or without passes.

Swedish journalists still are crossing the border at will, however, and when I suggested that this hardly was cricket, a Norwegian captain said, "neither was the invasion of Scandinavia."

The Norwegian wounded were transported to Boden, 30 miles from Lulea, Swedish ore port on the Gulf of Bothnia.

On my way to the northern front I took a 35-hour train ride from Stockholm to Kiruna, where I was stopped the first time.

When military police insisted they would not be responsible for foreigners, "especially journalists," I determined that that crowded, uncomfortable train ride should not be in vain.

So after being ordered to return south I skipped the train at Gallivare, 70 miles south.

There the taxi driver agreed to make the trip into Norway for a bonus.

By bundling down in the rear seat I reached the frontier a mile north of Vassijaure-Riksgransen and shortly after noon crossed the border.

Then in a raging Arctic snowstorm, with snowflakes falling like marshmallows, I made the tortuous journey to the environs of Narvik, taking a wooded path instead of the road.

British Minister Warns Italy to 'Behave as Neutral'

which he is using the controlled papers.

Some informed Britons predicted the Italian press reaction to war developments might improve in a few days.

The war reviewer, W. N. Ewer, said in the Daily Herald that the Allies "are watching Italy very closely . . . We still cannot be really sure about Il Duce's intentions."

The writer said that all necessary protective naval, military and air arrangements are being made on the hypothesis that Mussolini means to join in and that if he does "we must strike hard and swiftly."

He added that "all this Italian raging and threatening may be simply a diplomatic offensive in the aid of the Fuehrer; an attempt to frighten the Allies into diverting ships to the Mediterranean from the North Sea."

Many diplomatic observers in London, however, lean toward the belief that Mussolini has been flirting of late with the idea of entering the war on Germany's side.

Il Duce never has forgotten Britain's part in imposing sanctions against Italy during the conquest of Ethiopia and, in addition, believes that the overthrow of Nazism in Germany might endanger the Fascist set-up in Italy, these observers say.

Another theory held here is that Mussolini has something else up his sleeve, possibly a quick raid on the Greek-owned island of Corfu or one of Yugoslavia's northern Adriatic ports which, with Albania, would give him complete control of the Adriatic.

Whatever is in Mussolini's mind, the British blockade minister's blunt reference to Italy's position is expected to bring a clarification of the whole situation.

Calls 4 Classes

Rome, April 17 (AP).—The Official Gazette tonight published a decree empowering the calling up of Italians of four military classes who previously were rejected for service or received only partial training.

Some of the men are of the classes of 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914, who were once rejected but proved on reexamination to be "fit for service." Men of these classes who previously had been exempted for reasons of stature or ability also were summoned for additional training.

Fear Trouble Ahead

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, April 17.—The Italian stock exchanges had a black day today, thus giving the strongest indication of impending trouble that has yet been seen.

There can be little doubt that those whom Italians call "Pezzi Grossi," which in American means "Big Shots," are unloading because they know or believe that something very grave is going to happen to Italy in the near future.

The Italian bourses respond like all exchanges, although generally within narrower limits, to the things which normally strengthen or weaken industrial shares and government bonds. However, here movements of any magnitude are unusually significant, because the big industrial leaders are Fascists working in close contact with the government, which, in turn, has large financial interests in their corporations. Therefore when the big stockholders start unloading it means something, and that is what has been happening over the past week and particularly today.

Prints Fierce Reply

The newspapers continue their skillful if rather astonishing demonstration of unadulterated German successes and Allied defeats. Because the London News Chronicle attacked Italy editorially yesterday morning, warning her to think twice before opposing the Allies, tonight's Giornale d'Italia prints a fierce reply, telling it and all Englishmen to mind their own businesses.

It will be interesting to see what reply the Italian press makes to a strong warning issued by the London British Broadcasting Co. news broadcaster this afternoon, clearly on official inspiration. He said, in effect, that Italy should watch her step sige the Allies have a large fleet in the Mediterranean and a large land foree in the Near East.

Bari, Adriatic port in southern Italy, has been declared a prohibited area. The news of this decision was not, however, published here.

spoke on "The Fight for Americanism."

The Congress yesterday adopted a resolution authorizing the payment of the remaining $100,000 debt on Constitution Hall by October 11, date of the society's fiftieth anniversary. The resolution empowered the national board of management to make appropriations from the reserve fund and additional transfers from the current fund, thus to free the society of this debt.

Oursler said in his warning on propaganda:

"We are the focal point for various propaganda, but it is in this very universality of attack that I see the greatest hope. The more lies they tell us, the less we are likely to believe any of them.

Refuses to Prophesy

"We are sympathetic toward various countries in their wars but no propaganda has yet made any substantial group of American citizens believe that we should get into the war."

Oursler said that neither President Roosevelt nor anyone else can foretell whether American soldiers may yet be sent abroad.

"Prophecy is a practice best left to the astrologers at Coney Island," he added.

"The British today say they are not employing propaganda of any kind in the United States. That is an excellent kind of propaganda. Lord Lothian's speeches . . . are masterpieces of understanding of the American point of view, and therefore masterpieces of strategy."

Oursler added that "every European government has learned a great deal" about giving out information. "They know that lies are bound to be exploded eventually. Now all nations seem to have dropped barefaced lying as a policy. Instead, they are sticking to the facts, but only to the facts that they want to use. This is a principle that I have often called 'malicious selectivity'."

He said: "No man can tell what is going to happen in the United States. We may get a dictator here.

"We may wear shirts of the same color. We may even salute the dictator. For one day or two days! But not for long. The thumb is going to come back to the nostril. Because we are Americans and that is the way we are."

In his definition of Americanism, he included "the spirit of men and women great enough to laugh at themselves and their leaders, if need be. We are a free people with a sense of humor."

Miss Chenoweth Reports

Last night's report from Miss Lillian Chenoweth, regent of the District of Columbia D. A. R., said that its "highlight of the year" has been the Golden Jubilee drive when more than $1,000 was raised. The major portion of it went to the National Endowment Fund, and the remainder to the recently acquired chapter house.

Other items in the District report included 30 acres of "Penny Pines;" 29 scholarships given; the Americanism Committee's contacts with 2,000 students of 52 nationalities.

The Virginia report from Mrs. C. A. Swann Sinclair, of Alexandria, State regent, pointed out that the State jubilee project, the restoration of the ballroom in Gadsby's Tavern "will be completed and paid for by October 1."

"In our memorial forest, 52,000 pines have been planted, and eight large cedars in honor of framers of the Constitution," the Virginia report stated.

"Membership in our Junior American Citizen Clubs has been doubled," it was pointed out in the Virginia report which also cited the restoration of old records and documents, and other items.

Maryland Regent's Statement

The report from the Maryland State regent, Mrs. Wilbur B. Blakeslee, mentioned "a net gain of about 60 new members" in an effort to increase membership.

The dedication of a 34-acre grove of "Penny Pines" near Northeast, Md., to commemorate the jubilee and to honor Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general, was listed in the report.

Among many other items in the Maryland report was the collection of "a large amount of historical data" about Maryland's part in the American Revolution. When more material is gathered "it will be published for the benefit of our members and the public."

Among the reports at yesterday afternoon's session, Mrs. Carl S. Hoskins, of Lisbon, N. H., reporting on the manual for citizenship, said 379,352 copies were distributed from March, 1939, to March, 1940. The greatest outlet is through naturalization courts, she said.

"This pats year shows a large increase in the number of aliens begging for citizenship . . . The question is sometimes asked, 'Why encourage these foreigners, many of them undesirable and unwanted in their own countries, to apply for the protection of American citizenship?' These men and women are with us, and here they wi'' stay, unless methods were resorted to which would be unthinkable in connection with American ideals."

Mrs. Smith H. Stebbins, chairman of the committee for work at the immigration station at Ellis Island, said: "The demand for our work has tripled in the last ten years."

The report of the student loan fund committee, of which Miss Claudine Hutter is chairman, said more than 4,000 students "have used loans from the fund, nearing $400,000."

Lucille Lewis, dramatic soprano, who was introduced as "a descendant of a Cherokee Indian chief," sang five songs at the afternoon session.

Dr. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House, spoke on "Conservation of the Home."

sages printed and mailed at Government expense.

The Minnesota Republican said the Black-Wallace memorandum would reach the bulk of the farm loan association members "within a day or two of April 15—when Secretary Wallace publicly announced that he considered the Jones farm credit bill a major campaign issue."

"That made it pretty plain to the borrowers what the memorandum of April 10 was about," Andresen added.

Representative Harry Coffee (Democrat), of Nebraska, reported last night that the Black-Wallace letter "has definitely turned sentiment on the House Agriculture Committee against the Jones bill."

The memorandum was "pure propaganda in favor of the Jones bill and against the Gillette bill," Coffee said. The Gillette bill would remove the Farm Credit Administration from the Department of Agriculture, where it was transferred by President Roosevelt's reorganization order of June 30, 1939, and restored the agency to independent status.

Coffee said the Secretary's memorandum "has shown the Agriculture Committee the importance of putting the Farm Credit Administration where it cannot be used as a political propaganda agency."

Trade Bureau Sees Upturn By Summer

Winter Down Swing Levels Off, Textiles, Steel in Demand

By the Associated Press

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicted yesterday an improvement in general economic conditions by summer.

In a statement the bureau noted that the sharp winter down swing in industrial production had leveled off. The Federal Reserve Board concurred with an announcement that the industrial activity rate of decline had slowed down in March and that there was "little further decrease" in the first half of April.

The seasonally adjusted Index of Industrial Production was 103 for March, the board said, compared with the record high of 128 in December, 109 in February and 98 in March, 1939.

Demand for Steel

The economics bureau said that its prediction of business betterment was supported by "signs of better demand for steel and textiles than since last fall, reviving interest in home building and an increase in industrial exports relative to production."

Pointing out that the industrial production decline during the first three months of this year was one of the most rapid of record, the bureau said that ordinarily this condition would have developed a "vicious downward spiral" and possibly a severe depression.

Several factors prevented such an outcome, the bureau said, adding that:

"Inventories were increased last fall, but at prices which were not sufficiently higher than those at present to cause apprehension of severe losses. Another factor helping to prevent the development of a depression psychology among businessmen is the war in Europe, which appears to be throwing considerable new business our way, both directly and indirectly."

May Aid Farmers

While explaining that the war had adversely affected exports of some farm products, the bureau said that the spread of the conflict to Scandinavia might increase the export demand for such American commodities as pork, lard and evaporated milk.

School Study Of Sex Opposed

school, the boys and girls meeting in separate classes," said the Rev. Mr. Garner.

"To say that parents must give intimate details of sex information to their children is not only to reflect on any adequate consideration of facts, but is also a failure to face realities."

The clergyman explained that many parents themselves are not qualified to direct their children, as point conceded by Gen. Fries.

"I am not interested in any particular committee's, or organization's, or individual's pet ideas on this subject," the Rev. Mr. Garner said. "I am simply interested in saving our boys and girls from tragedies that I see too often."

Discussion of the Fries resolution was spirited, and virtually every member of the committee participated, but the clergyman stood alone. No one supported his plea for a rgeular curricular course on sex education. A motion urging that the subject be indorsed "in principle" was voted down.

One committee member delivered an impassioned speech to the effect that if the seventh and tenth commandments are impressed sufficiently upon children, there will be no need of teaching the so-called facts of life in school.

Another said that, in his 72 years, he has observed no necessity for instruction on sexual matters, explaining that the family circle, the family doctor and nature are adequate in this respect. He viewed sex education as "a new kind of machinery for regimenting our people."

Still another member, while not supporting the Rev. Mr. Garner, thought action on the disputed subject should be deferred pending clarification of the issue by the Board of Education. This motion also was defeated after Gen. Fries explanied that, as head of the special committee which studied the problem, he deliberately refrained from seeking school data "because the Board of Trade should act independently."

Besides recommending occasional medical lectures on "certain diseases" to segregated groups, the Fries resolution, as adopted, urges the introduction of "a thorough course in physiology of the human system," beginning anywhere from the sixth to eighth grades.

Physiology, hygiene and anatomy are now taught in science and physical education classes but not in any single, concentrated course.

Gen. Fries originally proposed that the same physiology lessons which he took 50 years ago be revived here but this phrase was deleted from the resolution from the floor.

British Shell Nazi Air Base At Stavanger

Fight Foes' Airfleet On Way Home; One Ship Hit, London Says

the gunners aboard the ships their target. At the same time the bomber dropped a number of incendiary bombs on the German airplanes standing on the field, and then withdrew to observe and direct the ship's fire, as the big guns offshore began to flash.

When full daylight appeared, the British ships evidently started home. While they were on their way, according to the admiralty communique, they were attacked by German bombers and one cruiser was hit. The German claim that the ship was sunk is denied here, however, and the communique stated that the cruiser "is continuing on her course to her base."

Before the warships went into action against Stavanger, Royal Air Force bombers carried out an attack on the Trondheim Airport, which is also held by the Germans.

But while this attack was the first on Trondheim since the Nazis invaded Norway eight days ago, the chief interest was directed tonight to the shelling of Stavanger, already bombed seven times by the R. A. F.

Since the start of the war many experts have been saying that the British dare not risk their big ships within easy range of Germany's bombers. Heretofore nobody has even discussed the possibility of a warship attacking a bomber. Yet that is precisely what Winston Churchill ordered his men to do in this morning's Stavanger raid.

Although the admiralty communique on the result of the shelling is a masterpiece of official obscurity, it tells enough to suggest the possibilities of such attacks in driving the Germans back while the British land their troops.

The battle cruiser Renown, in its recent fight with the Scharnhorst, fired at a range of 29,000 yards, or nearly 15 miles. At that she was not firing full out, and there are over a dozen ships in the navy that can outfire the Renown. With gunnery down to an exact science—so exact that it can hit a battleship at the range of 15 miles—the possibilities of this form of fighting along the Norwegian coast can be understood.

Norwegian officials again today urged the British government to act quickly in getting Allied troops into south Norway. It is pointed out that the Norwegians knew what to expect when they decided to resist the German invasion without Allied help. This prospect, the Norwegians are now saying, they face without complaint, but they insist that Allied help must come to south Norway and must come immediately.

Altogether there has been more than the usual amount of naval and air news today. The admiralty announced this morning that the British submarine Thistle, 1,575 tons, which had been operating in the North Sea, was now presumed to be lost. The Thistle is a new submarine, and a sister of the Thetis which sank during trials in Liverpool Bay last spring.

The Thistle carried 53 officers and men, all of whom are now presumed to be lost. It is generally believed she took part in attacks on German troop transports crossing from Denmark to Oslo.

Evidently anticipating a renewal of U-Boat activity around the British naval yards, the Admiralty also announced today that a new protective mine field had been stretched across the mouth of the River Clyde, upon which perhaps the most famous shipbuilding yards in the world are located.

Downs Reported Bombed

London, Thursday, April 18 (AP).—Numerous German bombers were reported early today to have attacked shipping in the Downs, Britain's big English Channel contraband control point.

The sound of heavy firing and the roar of intercepting airplanes was heard along the southeast coast.

About the only mention of further Allied advanced on Norwegian soil to counter Germany's reported rapid consolidation on her outposts was a Paris report that France is sending 20,000 men to the north and a belief by military men here that the Allied landing forces were pushing south from Narvik toward the key seaport and railway junction of Trondheim.

They said that if Germany is allowed to clean up Southern Norway unhindered she will be able to fling a line across the central part of the country and that this line, constructed with German ingenuity, would be impossible to assault successfully unless the attack were accompanied by Allied heavy artillery.

British Cruiser Sunk, 2 More Hit By Bombers, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin, April 17.—Germany's airmen tonight were reported officially to have sunk a British cruiser with a "bull's-eye" hit, damaged two other cruisers so that they probably cannot make port and scored a direct bomb strike on a British battleship.

The raid off Norway's southwestern coast (presumably after the British battle fleet had shelled Stavanger), climaxed German announcement of previous air and naval successes.

Thus Germany's two-day score, as announced here, stood tonight as follows:

A British cruiser sunk in an encounter at noon today.

Two British cruisers hit by three heavy bombs in the same raid and apparently so gravely damaged that it was doubted whether they would reach home.

A battleship damaged by a direct bomb hit.

A destroyer of the "tribal" class sunk by a German submarine yesterday off the Shetland Islands, at Britain's northern tip.

An "enemy submarine" and an "enemy cruiser" sunk yesterday by heavy bomb hits northwest of Mold Fjord (apparently off Trondheim.)

On land in Norway, authorized sources said, Germany has added a strong force of armored cars to her mechanized equipment in the vicinity of Oslo.

The German command was represented as being determined to crush Norwegian resistance swiftly and it was again asserted that the occupation is proceeding systematically.

The Germans insisted also that they are encountering virtually no serious opposition in the south.

Radio dispatches from the far-northern ore port of Narvik, which the Germans insist they hold, stated there was no action in that city and no new effort to land British troops at that point.

German reconnaissance planes watched the British detachment which landed in the vicinity of Harstad, about 35 miles north of Narvik.

German sources said the British would have to cross difficult terrain if they attempted to march to Narvik from that point.

German forces, said the high command, have a firm grip on all important railway lines in Norway, including the oreline from Narvik east to the Swedish border.

The fight along this line, the Germans said, ended with bloody losses for the Norwegian defenders, many of whom were said to have been taken prisoner while others fled across the Swedish frontier.

The high command reported, however, there was a heavy bombardment of Narvik city and port Tuesday night by British naval forces.

Elsewhere in Norway, the high command said, the Germans have put coastal defenses in shape to defend Oslo Fjord, and have incorporated several Norwegian torpedo boats into the German naval force.

In the midst of these reports of blows to England at sea and of satisfactory progress in Norway, 2,000 Red Cross nurses, packed in the center of an audience of 20,000 at the Sports Palace, heard Propaganda Minister Goebbels declare Germany is too solidly behind Adolf Hitler to permit any disintegration of the home front, such as occurred in 1918.

Germans realize this is a fight for existence, he said.

The Allies now admit it is a fight to smash Germany, he declared, and "they no longer say they merely desire to crush Hitlerism."

"The British and French plutocracies for centuries have been able to control Europe because of internal dissensions in Germany," Goebbels said.

"But now it is volkskrieg (war by the whole people) and every German knows that everything hangs in the balance."

Capital Sailor Found Pre-Nazi Narvik Dull

The story of a young Washingtonian who was sitting on top of a volcano in the Scandinavian war zone without knowing it was told yesterday in a letter received by Mrs. Robert W. Baker, 1827 Jefferson place northwest.

CLARK

The letter was from her nephew, John Alexander Clark, radio officer on the American freighter Flying Fish. It was mailed at Bergen March 28, 11 days before the German invasion of Denmark and Norway.

"Narvik was not much, to say the least," Clark wrote. "There is absolutely nothing of interest there. It appears to be an active port only as a result of the war, for there were close to 25 ships awaiting berth to load iron ore."

"From all reports, we are liable to be here (Bergen) close to a month," Clark wrote his aunt. "The harbor here, too, is choked with shipping of all countries and we will have to await our turn.

"Aside from certain restrictions, we have seen very little of war conditions. We were stopped and boarded for examination one day out at sea by a warship of one of the belligerents but after an hour's detention we proceeded on our way."

The Federal Diary:

Chiefs Urge Works' Rolls In Civil Service

Harrington and Clark Says Threat to Bar Them, Hurts Morale

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Two Government Works chiefs yesterday asked the Senate Civil Service Committee to open the way for several thousand workers to enter civil service.

Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA administrator, said that the threat to bar employes of his organization from the benefits of the proposed Ramspeck bill had injured morale. Col. E. W. Clark, head of the Public Works Administration, asked that some way be found to extend Civil Service to more than 5,000 persons furloughed from the agency since last July, and improve their chance of finding other Government jobs.

On the other hand, Senator Schwartz (Democrat), of Wyoming, testified that employes of the Tennessee Valley Authority should be "specifically exempted" from the Ramspeck bill.

Appeals System Asked

Representative Rogers (Republican), of Massachusetts, said she opposed the measure because "I believe this is not a real merit bill." She recommended use of competitive examinations in place of the bill's proposal to admit employes to civil service through noncompetitive examination.

While the Senate committee studied the Ramspeck bill, representatives of ten Government employe organizations called for an appeals system to settle employe grievances in a hearing before the House Civil Service Committee.

Col. Harrington told the Senate committee that a House amendment to the Ramspeck bill barring WPA employes from civil service affected 1,500 workers in Washington and 25,000 in the field.

"They feel it's an injustice and discrimination to be singled out and barred from the advantages which would go to thousands of others," said Col. Harrington.

The result, he said, was a tendency to seek jobs elsewhere and a large turnover for the agency. He added that 325 of the Washington workers had served more than five years, while 970 had served from three to five years.

"No Personal Ax to Grind"

Asked by Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, whether he could see a time when WPA could be safely abandoned, Col. Harrington said the present period of "adjustment" would make a public works program necessary for five or ten years. He remarked, however, that giving its employes civil service would not make the agency permanent. This question, he said, "will be settled on much wider grounds."

Col Harrington said that he had "no personal ax to grind," since if the WPA stops, he can return to Army duty, and "much shorter hours."

Senator Schwartz, who served with the TVA investigating last year, said that the agency's merit system was better now than the Civil Service Commission could give.

"Excellent as is the work of the Civil Service Commission, that work is not superior to the merit system under the TVA," said Senator Schwartz.

Pointing out that the Civil Service Commission is behind in many parts of its work, Senator Schwartz said that if the TVA workers were brought under civil service, pressure in Washington would crowd the agency to the "bottom of the list of administrative priorities."

The TVA is engaged in a highly competitive enterprise, he said, and in its personnel needs it "requires a promptness of action not readily available under the classified civil service."

The Democratic Senator also questioned the Ramspeck bill on political grounds.

Said Senator Schwartz, "If you put 250,000 Democrats into the Civil Service, they won't be worth a thin dime to the party."

He said, however, that the Democratic Party could get along without them.

Mrs. Rogers told the committee a real merit bill would provide open competitive examinations. She said nearly 1,000,000 persons are in the reservoir of those eligible for civil service jobs. "You can imagine their despondency," she said, if thousands were "blanketed" into civil service through non-competitive examinations.

Mrs. Rogers gave the committee results of her survey on 57,000 employes in 19 agencies, now without civil service. Included were 1,743 from the District, 1,788 from Virginia, and 1,564 from Maryland.

E. Claude Babcock, of the Federal Personnel Association, gave the committee two amendments, backed by his organization and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. They would make seniority, rather than efficiency a guide for dismissing Government employes, and give credit for service in the armed forces in computing total length of Government service. Babcock said the present Ramspeck bill would mostly benefit emergency employes.

Chairman Bulow said the hearings will continue Friday. Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, and Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, are expected to testify.

Chairman Ramspeck, of the House Civil Service Committee, will hold a third hearing today on 11 bills to set up appeals machinery for Government workers. Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers, told the committee yesterday that "there is no such thing as permanent tenure, either in or out of the civil service." Col. Charles I. Stengle, A. F. G. E. president, said that employe grievances in all branches of the Government are Nation-wide, and advised using the best features of all the bills in setting up an appeals system.

Other witnesses included representatives of national postal employes, professional workers and mechanical unions.

"Choose to Live," a new film in the fight against cancer, was shown for the first time to Government officials yesterday. A second preview will be given at 3:30 p. m. today at the National nstitute of Health, Bethesda, Md. The film was produced by the Public Health Service and the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

A streamlined setup for handling grievances of employes has been approved by Secretary Wallace, Personnel Director Roy Handrickson said yesterday.

The department's own appeal's system has been operating for nearly two years, while the revised machinery has been in the making for the past four months. Into it have gone discussion of bureau heads, union officials and "sample" groups of employes.

Major change, said Hendrickson, is in provision for cutting down the time between the flare-up of grievances and their settlement. Time limits, in the new plan, are set for each stage of the appeals proceeding.

R. F. Wagner, Who Fought In Civil War at 8, Dies at 83

Union Veteran Later Fought Indians In Dakota Campaign

Richard F. Wagner, at 8 a Union bandsman with Grant at Richmond, and at 11 an Indian fighter in the Dakota Territories, died Tuesday at his home 5104 Fulton street northwest, at the age of 83.

The son of John Wagner, musician who organized bands for the Northern forces, Wagner stated his age as 12, minimum for enlistment, to go with the Union band to the Confederate capital, according to his son, John Wagner, of McLean, Va.

Sword Is War Memento

A gold-plated sword later presented him by Gen. Grant's colorbearer, is a memento of his service in the Union forces. The sword is now in possession of a daughter, Miss Crystal V. Wagner, of 225 Thirty-fourth street northeast.

Three years after Appomattox, Wagner was again in the service of his country, both as bandsman and active in combat duty against Indians at Fort Rice, in the Dakota Territories.

Yellowed discharge papers under the seal of the United States, bear this evidence: "Richard Wagner . . . a private of the band company of the Seventeenth Regiment of Infantry who was enlisted the Sixteenth Day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty eight . . . to serve three years is hereby discharged."

The paper, dated January 16, 1871, and signed Col. T. L. Crittenden, U. S. A., describes him as "4 feet 5 inches high," and gives his age as 15. (His age actually was 14 at this time, according to the family).

Served 21 Years More

Other discharge papers reveal that he immediately reenlisted with the Dakota troops, but was discharged 21 months later "in consequence of a special order 258."

This discharge was arranged with expiration of the enlistment of his father, John Wagner, band leader, who was with his son at Fort Rice. The father was reluctant to return to Washington without his son, relatives recalled last night.

One of his daughters, Mrs. Leona Utz, with whom he lived at the Fulton street address, told of a stirring bit of action in which Wagner was involved.

When the fort was attacked by Sioux warriors, and the infantry hard pressed in its defense, young Wagner, now a corporal, manned a Gatling gun to help repulse the Indians.

Prior to his enlistment with the Western troops, Wagner took part in another historic event. Still with the Civil War band at Lincoln's assassination, he played in the funeral cortege. It was his father who led the band and wrote the funeral march.

In relating this, the leader's grandson, John Wagner, declared he had talked with Robert Todd Lincoln, the martyred President's eldest son, before the latter's death in 1926. Robert Lincoln then expressed the wish to talk with Richard Wagner but the meeting was never arranged.

Returning here from his Dakota service, Wagner continued his interrupted schooling. Later organizing his own orchestra he played in several Washington and Baltimore theaters.

Wagner's death came after a year's illness. Asthma that he contracted in the Indian campaigns contributed to his failing health.

Surviving, besides Mrs. Utz, Miss Wagner and John Wagner, are a son, Thomas F. Wagner, and two daughters, Mrs. Olga S. Havell and Mrs. Marge M. Darne. There are 11 grandchildren and 4 great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were yesterday at Lee's funeral home. Burial was in Congressional Cemetery.

Miners to Sing Quaint Ballads At Festival

Anthracite Region Troubadors Appear Here Next Week

The last of the "mine patch minstrels" will appear at the seventh annual National Folk Festival next week to sing and play the miners' ballads which they helped make popular.

The gray-haired men, all well over 60, are remnants of one of the most picturesque aspects of American folk life. More talented at singing and fiddling than their fellow-miners in the drab Pennsylvania anthracite villages, or "patches," they abandoned their picks and shovels. With songs and dances, they wandered from patch to patch filling the need for entertainment before the days of the radio and the automobile.

Like the troubadors of the Middle Ages, they found all doors open and were entertained everywhere as honored guests. These minstrels spread throughout the entire anthracite region the ballads improvised in individual patches to immortalize the nine disasters and strikes which were so frequent during the last century.

One-Man Campaign

The songs, an important part of American folklore, were unknown outside the mining towns until about 15 years ago. Then George Korson, Pennsylvania newspaperman, began a one-man campaign through articles, lectures and books to make the miners' lore familiar to the rest of the country.

Korson, now director of the Pennsylvania Folk Festival held at Bucknell University, is in Washington writing another book on the lore of the anthracite mines. He has arranged the miners' program which will be presented during the National Folk Festival at Constitution Hall next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

"It's the best group of miners we've had at the National Folk Festival in five years," Korson said. "Four of the five men who will appear are famous throughout Pennsylvania as the greatest of the anthracite minstrels. The fourth, young Anthony Connors, is the son of a minstrel who appeared at last year's festival.

Champion With Group

"In the group is Dap Walsh, undisputed champion of Pennsylvania's ballad singers. For two successive years he won medals at the Pennsylvania State Festival. Others in the group will be Jerry Byrnes, Tom McDonnell and James Muldowney."

The miners are one of numerous American folk groups which will be seen at the Folk Festival. Tickets for matinee and evening performances are on sale at The Washington Post.

Social Agencies Group Will Confer Today

Leisure time programs for the teaching of religious, racial and cultural appreciation will be the theme of a one-day conference of the recreation division of the Council of Social Agencies at 10 a. m. today in the Y. W. C. A.

Also participating in the conference will be the Washington Round Table and National Conference of Christians and Jews. Dr. James Allen Nolen will preside.

Baltimore Firm Bids Low on Dormitories

The Lacchi Construction Co., of Baltimore, yesterday submitted a low bid of $187,600 to build three new dormitory buildings at the District Training School at Laurel, Md.

Dr. James Lewald, superintendent of the institution, which serves the District's feeble-minded, for many years has complained about the overcrowded conditions at the school. Money for new buildings is contained in the present supply bill.

Actors Fund Benefits Have Hit the Heights

Daniel Frohman Assembling New Star Cast; The National Picks Up a May Musical; This, That and the Other About the Theater

IF DANIEL FROHMAN'S PLANS still hold water—and they would have to to amount to anything in weather like this—Washington will witness a renewal of what used to be an annual fixture, in the National Theater on Sunday night, May 5.

For many years, in association with Oliver Jones, the then executive secretary of the Actors Fund of America, we were closely identified with the presentation of these Actors Fund Benefits in the Capital. It would be useless here and now to attempt a recapitulation of all the distinguished stars of stage and screen "Uncle Daniel" brought to town year after year. To the best of my recollection, the fund never had a loser in Washington. The single benefit bills invariably were brilliant in both personnel and performance. Two, however, stand out in memory as particularly notable. They were about a decade apart, as the crow flies.

BELL

Back in the early 1920's, I think it was, it happened that Mr. Frohman brought his troupe to town while Dame Lloyd George, wife of the former British prime minister, and her daughter were visiting the National Capital. They occupied a box at the benefit and their presence probably attracted as many cash customers as the scintillant array of stars the venerable dean of American producers had under his wing. That event established an attendance record that was not to be broken until ten years later—or thereabouts.

It was at the time of President Roosevelt's first inauguration, in 1933, that the Actors Fund scored its all-time "smash" in this city. It was participated in by probably the greatest aggregation of stars "Uncle Dan" ever was able to assemble, plus the complete roster of those aboard the Warner Brothers' "Forty-Second Street Special" that had steamed into Washington the morning of March 4 just in time for the inaugural parade. Having boarded the special in Baltimore at 5 a. m., and crawled into town with it through a maze of inaugural specials that made the 40-mile trip consume 6½ hours, we remember distinctly that aboard, among many others, were Bette Davis, Leo Carrillo, Joe E. Brown, Tom Mix, Laura La Plante, Lyle Talbot, Glenda Farrell and Eleanor Holm. In his own entourage, Mr. Frohman had, also among many others, Noel Coward and Beatrice Lillie, the late William Faversham, Frances Starr, Cecilia Loftus, the perennial Fannie Ward and the Duncan Sisters. The coalition of all these forces put on a show that will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to sardine themselves into the Belasco Theater the one evening it was given. I hope Mr. Frohman repeats this year.

Says Mr. Edward K. Moss, 1405 G street northwest: "I thought you might be interested to know that Leonard Sillman has considered opening his 'New Faces of 1940,' with Joe Cook, Paul Haakon, Charles Weidman and Patsy Kelly, at the National in the early part of May. Just how far negotiations have gone, I don't know, but the fact that Washington is being considered I have on the authority of one of the revue's authors." Manager Edmund Plohn, of the National had no word of this, as of yesterday. He did have word, however, that William Gaxton and Victor Moore will follow George M. Cohan on E street, the week of May 6, in their new musical "Louisiana Purchase." If we should get them both, that would be plenty good.

Dots and Dashes

Monday, June 10, will be opening night at the Roadside Theater, Washington's original haymow playhouse . . . Inaugural attraction not yet set, but a thriller-diller is promised . . . Gene Ford's new song, "Cherry Blossom Time," has been published and is being distributed by the Ross Jewelry Co., facing the Capitol Theater on F street—an establishment with a terrific enthusiasm for the theater . . . The second edition of Harry Anger's streamlined minstrel show, "Gentlemen, Be Seated," will be the stage attraction at the Earle, beginning Friday, April 25 . . . Gus Van will be interlocutor, with Charles "Slim" Timblin and Lou Lubin on the ends—the circle will number 60 . . . "Gone With the Wind" is getting around to the Lust suburban theaters . . . Opens multiple-day runs in Hyattsville, Marlboro and Rockville on April 28 and in Bethesda on May 5 . . . Horace Heidt's Orchestra, opening at the Capitol tomorrow, has gained by a bitter loss . . . A dozen years ago, when I first met Horace, the star of his act was Lobo, one of the handsomest and best-trained German shepherd dogs ever seen on a stage . . . Lobo died untimely from poisoned food and was succeeded by Lobo II and Lobo III . . . They passed on, too . . . So it comes about that the Heidt organization now is known for its fine musicianship and no longer as "the band with that wonderful dog."

Hollywood, April 17.

One of the most impressive things about "Oscar Speaks," that swell short about the academy award winners, was the way Walter Wanger photographed. After this, instead of waging a campaign for a handsome leading man, Walter can just turn around and do it himself. Boy! did he have IT! . . . It was Marie Dressler who got the biggest hand. What a trouper! . . . Judy Garland singing "Over the Rainbow" always gets me—they should make a short of that number.

HOPPER

Glad to see Frances Marion get credit for two of our biggest pictures, "The Big House" and "Min and Bill." Carey Wilson, who did the commentating and who's had his name as writer on at least a hundred films never started to get fan mail till his voice was heard in Metro's shorts. Now he's as well known as Leo the Lion.

It was a smart idea of Warners, and the appeal to me and you is that our stars can buy anything in the world except an Oscar—they have to earn that.

I've heard actors about town call Ralph Bellamy lucky. He's not only lucky, but one of the most grateful actors I've ever met. Arthur Hopkins gave him his first chance in a Lynn Riggs play, when along came an offer from Metro for a contract at $750 a week. He said, "I'll have to consult Mr. Hopkins." "But why? — the show's closed." "Well, Hopkins gave me my chance, and I want to ask him." He did. Hoppie said, "As long as you're going into the movies, I wish you'd sign with Joe Schenck, because I'm under obligation to him."

Ralph did, taking $150 less a week. And just a few months ago, when he heard Hoppie wasn't doing so well and was about to put on a new play, Ralph offered his services free.

Since Jackie Cooper's mother has been so ill, he and his pal, Sidney Miller, are writing a play about a debutante. Leading character is a girl born on the East Side who dreams she's a debutante.

"Ma says I can't go to the Fair,
It's near the salty beach air,
It'll kill the curl in my hair,
I just can't have any fun!
I'm Debutante No. 1.
"I can't take a walk in the breeze.
Without my cute Pekingese
And bodyguard, if you please!
The kind that carries a gun.
I'm Debutante No. 1.
"Why must I go out each night with guys
Who are a bore to me?
Staying home with some good book
Would mean much more to me.
Soon I'll go to every cafe

There's DEBUTRAMP No. 1.'"

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, April 17.

JEREMIAH T. MAHONEY, who presided at the police trials, has completed his report to Police Commissioner Valentine. The officials believe that Mahoney will recommend the dismissal of Lieut. Behan and that all the accused policemen be found guilty . . . "Buggsy" Goldstein still doesn't believe that his colleague, Abe Reles, has implicated him in Murder, Inc. He therefore will be surprised when Reles will take the witness stand against him, and testify to a murder committed in the basement of the defendant's home . . . Roger Wolfe Kahn, son of the late Otto Kahn, has purchased another plane. He may accept an aviation post offered him in the Federal Government.

DORE SCHARY, who wrote the Tom Edison films, spent the last two weeks in Washington, collecting biographic material for his newest movie, "Bolivar" . . . Because this new movie involves Pan American relations, Schary had a long interview with Sumner Welles. He reported to his studio, and was asked: "What's Welles like?" "The perfect diplomat type," he replied. "Just like Louis Calhern."

BEATRICE LILLIE will return to New York on the next trip to be made by the Rex . . . Three District Attorneys are racing to indict Lepke for murder—Foley, of the Bronx, O'Dwyer, of Brooklyn, and Dewey, of Manhattan . . . Fefe Ferry, of the Monte Carlo, will operate the elegant Terrace Club at the New York World's Fair . . . Chile and the Argentine have invited Benny Goodman to follow Stokowski in a goodwill tour of South America . . . The American Music Hall, on East Fifty-fifth street, will become a Pago-Pago establishment with a "Sadie Thompson" basement cafe.

SIX YEARS AGO Robert Ardrey's "Star Spangled" was presented on Broadway. The critics panned it, but expressed hope for the author's career . . . The young playwright then wrote "How to Get Tough About It," and "Casey Jones"—which also received unfavorable notices, although the reviewers again assured Ardrey that he shows much promise. Bob's trips to Broadway and back were made via bus, because he couldn't afford train fare. He lived, frugally, in the Midwest, because no theater angel offered him tangible encouragement Garson Kanin, the director, finally induced two movie studios to employ Ardrey. He's now in Hollywood, getting more than $1,000 a week, and saving more than half of that. This week, six years too late, came the theater's first real encouragement—the $1,500 Sidney Howard Memorial Award.

"GANGY" COHEN, the Hollywood actor who was brought East in connection with the Brooklyn murder ring, is spilling his story to District Attorney O'Dwyer . . . The newspapers neglected to cover Harlem's Easter parade last Sunday. Because Easter Sunday was too cold, the Harlemites had postponed their parade until April 14—announcing that inasmuch as the President had changed Thanksgiving Day, a turkey is no less important than a new bonnet . . . The Cotton Club is being redecorated, in preparation for its new show . . . Dorothy Parker is at the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital in Hollywood—a victim of the flu.

DIXIE DAVIS and his wife, Hope Dare, have left their New Mexico retreat . . . Hope is in Hollywood now, seeing friends. Davis, suspected by Dutch Schultz's intimates as being the only man who knows where Shultz's fortune is buried, is in Arizona. He has no fear of vengeful acts against him. He has sent teasing postcards to New York, reading: "I'm out here Panhandlin'."

JOHN GARFIELD, who left Hollywood without seeing his newest movie, "Saturday's Children," finally saw it in Columbus—as a guest of Ohio's board of censors. The scene he liked most—a bath tub scene—was censored . . . Eddie Cantor, in blackface, will appear in the cast of "Louisiana Purchase," at the preview performance for the benefit of his summer camp . . . Danny Kaye, the town's newest favorite, will move from La Martinique to the Versailles . . . "Gone With the Wind" will be shown at Brandt Theaters, as soon as daylight-saving time becomes effective . . . If District Attorney Dewey gets two indictments he's seeking, the labor movement will be set back 50 years.

MARY DILLON, head of the Brooklyn Borough Gas Co. seldom misses a morning dip in the surf, even in the coldest weather . . . But even this invigorating routine didn't prepare for the shock she had, when she found two pickets in front of her offices. Miss Dillon learned that the pickets were picketing the wrong place—that their grievance was directed at another gas company—and so the duo departed . . . The next day one of the pickets asked to see Miss Dillon . . . "We made a mistake," the picket confessed. "But that isn't what I came to see you about" . . . "Then why have you come?" asked Miss Dillon . . . "I want," was the reply, "to get a gas heater—wholesale."

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 17 (INS).—I couldn't help feeling that the success of "Fifth Column" on the New York stage was due more to Franchot Tone's charm than to Ernest Hemingway's play. Certainly Hemingway gives us a rather dreary account of the Spanish conflict with far too many cuss words and not the sort of entertainment the average theatergoer would seek. But Franchot is such a swell actor and is so likeable that the women flock to the theater just to see him.

LOUELLA PARSONS

When I talked with Franchot there was no thought of leaving the play, but today I heard on the Paramount lot that Mike Levee had agented a deal for Tone to do "Virginia." He comes here the end of next month to costar with blonde Madeleine Carroll who, by the way, has rid herself of some of that superfluous weight. E. H. Griffith, who will produce and direct, is getting ready to call the roll June 3 and little Carolyn Lee will also be among those present.

When Katharine Hepburn comes here in July, to star in "The Philadelphia Story," M-G-M will see that she has a gold-plated cast. There will be names to help Katie get back in favor with the fickle public and a production that will leave nothing to be desired. Clark Gable and Robert Taylor are both to costar with La Hepburn to give the movie a box-office assurance. It will be interesting to see if Katie overcomes Harry Brandt's "poison at the box-office" article. She certainly did well on the stage and she may be the next one to show Mr. Brandt how foolish was his article.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Broderick Crawford is in the hospital for a nose operation; June Knight and her Texas bridegroom dining at the Beverly Derby; Steffi Duna and Dennis O'Keefe are aflame; Elsa Maxwell entertained at luncheon for H. R. Knickerbocker, famous International News Service correspondent, yesterday and he is certaintly the most interesting man who has visited Hollywood in many a day. The luncheon was on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot, where Elsa is emoting; Walter Pidgeon is fighting the flu. So "Nick Carter" is being shot around him—and no pun intended; Joan Crawford took off for New York last night a few hours after her final divorce decree was granted; Ruth Selwyn and Richard Gully dining tete-a-tete at Ciro's. They acted much as they did a few months ago when their romance was so hectic.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

With a trans-Pacific luuxury liner as its setting, this new film, co-starring Merle Oberon and George Brent, tells the romance of a girl who has but a few months to live and a man being brought back to San Quentin for a death sentence. Pat O'Brien, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Binnie Barnes, Frank McHugh, Eric Blore and Henry O'Neill are in the cast. Songs in the score include "Broadway's Still Broadway" and "My Wonderful One. Let's Dance." Kent Taylor, Wallace Ford and Richard Lane head the supporting cast. Horace Heidt and his Musical Knights, stars of the "Pot of Gold" radio program, are the stage attraction, presenting the novel arrangements which have made them national favorites. Heidt will demonstrate how the "Pot of Gold" program works. If your telephone number happens to be selected while you are in the audience, you win $100. Opens tomorrow morning.

Metropolitan

"SEVENTEEN." Booth Tarkington's story of young love comes to the screen with Jackie Cooper as Willie Baxter and Betty Field as Lola Pratt, the Chicago charmer who broke his heart. Palace

"REBECCA." The highly-praised film from Daphne du Maurier's popular novel continues at the F street house for another week with Laurence Olivier and Joan Fontaine in the pivotal roles. RESINOL

Little

"It Happened One Night" returned yesterday to the Little Theater, sharing the new bill with Walt Disney's "Ferdinand, the Bull."

This comedy of 1934 won the Academy award as the best production of its year and brought "Oscars" to Frank Capra for the year's best direction, to Claudette Colbert for the year's finest performance by an actress and to Clark Gable for the best performance by an actor. Like "Gone With the Wind," the merry comedy swept the Academy Award field.

Suggested by a Samuel Hopkins Adams magazine story, "It Happened One Night" concerns the adventures of a New York heiress who runs away from papa Walter Connolly, links up by chance with reporter Clark Gable and embarks on a gay bus-hitch-hiking trip from Florida to New York. Roscoe Karns, Alan Hale, Ward Bond and Jameson Thomas are in the supporting company.

Belasco

"Ecstasy," the Czecho-Slovakian film (remember Czecho-Slovakia?) which introduced Hedy Lamarr to American film audiences, opened a limited engagement at the Belasco Theater yesterday morning.

A study of human emotions in the face of bitter frustration, the film employes symbolisms and suggestions to carry its point, a technique which, at the film's debut, gave rise to unnecessary sensationalism. In the striking person of Miss Lamarr, this release of 1937 brought to the screen a figure whose allure is one of Hollywood's present glories.

Short subjects and the latest newsreel complete the Belasco's bill.

red-head's company. Opens Sunday afternoon.

FATS WALLER and his orchestra will headline the incoming week at the T street theater. Waller will present his "Swingtime in Springtime" revue, featuring his 15-piece orchestra, Mike and Poke; Candy and Pepper; Mae Diggs and Edna Mae Harris. On the screen, Barton McLane and Rochelle Hudson will star in "Men Without Souls." Opens tomorrow morning.

Open-Air

"BROADWAY BILL." Frank Capra's film of racing men, starring Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, opens a three-evening engagement tonight at the drive-in auto theater on the Richmond Highway. Cary Grant and Jean Arthur will open Sunday evening in "Only Angels Have Wings."

Atlas

"THE HAWIIAN FOLLIES." Robert Bell, Joan Kahookona and Princess Abbey star in this revue from Honolulu on the stage bill at the northeast house for a three-day run, opening Sunday afternoon. On the screen, Alice Faye and Fred MacMurray star in "Little Old New York." and Margaret Lindsay and Wayne Morris play "Double Alibi."

Truex Comedy Is Presented At Pierce Hall

'Whistling in Dark' Gathers Momentum After Slow Start

By Richard L. Coe.

"Whistling in the Dark," that sprightly cops 'n' robbers comedy which served ebullient Ernest Truex so well on both stage and screen, played the first of two performances last night at Pierce Hall, with a couple of real live policemen in the cast of the Pierce Hall Players. It will be repeated this evening.

With a Metropolitan Police Boys Club on the lower floor of its pleasant home to supply convenient, obliging officers of the law, the Pierce Hallers are celebrating their tenth anniversary season with a pleasing touch of realism in casting and solidity in setting. Last night's comedy, laggard in pace at first, gained momentum as the action developed, and by the time the evening was over the cognoscenti of Harvard street were able to assure each other that a good time had been had by all.

Detective Writer Duped

Had been had by all that is, except shy Wallace Porter, the yarn-spinner who had a fine fame as detective story writer. He bungled into a nest of crooks while searching for a quiet place to do his writing and was then forced to connive with the felons in their dastardly deeds. With his best girl depending on him and with a threat of death hanging over him, author Porter had anything but a good time.

You may recall that "Whistling in the Dark" has that curious denouement which relies for its solution on a remarkable matter of electrophysics that it would be treason to divulge, but is, to a layman, at least, a highly debatable problem. But the point made by co-authors Laurence Gross and Edward Childs Carpenter was that it served their hero well and that it makes their third act both tense and amusing.

The Pierce Hall group has been more at ease of an opening night. A tendency to bungle lines is a trait not unknown to amateur players, but this group has generally been exemplary in that matter. However, the slow start last night gave way to definite pace in the second and third acts.

Attractive Stage Setting

As the bashful hero, Doyle Tripp seemed effectively cast. Edith Reynolds' pretty heroine was appealing, would be far more so with more care to pronunciation. W. Julian Hatcher's gun-twirling gangster was thoughtfully and effectively conceived. Although Nell Childs had nothing to say as the slatternly Hilda, she certainly looked the part! Robert Coren's Herman was not without its moments of humor while Sidney Bassler and J. Edmond Veltch did well enough with their hardly admirable assignments. James Parker, Carl Pribek, Harry Whiting and Edward F. Quigley completed the cast.

Paul Alexander directed and the attractive new setting, giving the Pierce Hall stage a ceiling for the first time, was the commendable work of K. Hilding Beij.

Club Women To Hear McClure

Wallace McClure, assistant chief of the treaty division of the State Department, will address the Prince Georges Federation of Women's Clubs at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow at the University of Maryland. The meeting will be in the old library room.

Other speakers will be Noah M. Mason, Illinois Congressman, and Mrs. Ernest Faeshe, Washington.

Mrs. Henry Naylor is president of the federation.

Man Indicted Here in Theft From Brother

Raleigh B. Diamond Accused of Taking 2 Loads of Scrap Iron

Raleigh B. Diamond, 41, of 1326 Forty-fifth place northeast, was indicted by the District grand jury yesterday on a charge of stealing two truck loads of scrap iron from the construction lot of his brother, Bernard F. Diamond, at 2801 Eighth street northeast.

The indictment of Diamond was among 41 presented before Justice F. Dickinson Letts of the District Court.

Raleigh B. Diamond pleaded not guilty when arraigned and was committed to the District Jail in default of $500 bond. He was sentenced to three years in jail for larceny in Baltimore in 1932.

The grand jury accused James F. (Buzz) Donovan, 39, of taking part in the holdup March 22 of Myer H. Landay in his liquor store at 647 H street northeast. Landay said he was robbed of $75. Codefendant with Donovan was Walter E. Harde, 39.

Donovan fought the District Parole Board for years, seeking release from a term imposed nearly a decade ago for robbery. Released last year, he claimed police hounded him and now has pending in the District Court a $25,000 damage suit against Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, whom he charged with false arrest. Donovan denied taking part in the liquor store robbery.

Assault with intent to rob—Richard O. Taylor, 20, colored; Theodore R. Roebuck, 19, colored.

Assault with dangerous weapon—Richard O. Taylor, 20, colored; John Wier, 48; James E. Springs, 55, colored; John Cloude, 22, colored; Grady Golden, 42, colored; Margaret Luskey, 22; Zannie Taylor, 28, colored; Willie Byrd, 36, colored.

Sodomy—Leroy Hamilton Henderson, 39, colored.

The grand jury dismissed the following charges: Having untaxed liquor, Moses E. Crieg, 42, colored; running lottery and having numbers tickets, Garnon E. Ewell and George Stockstill; setting up gaming table, George Stockstill and John A. Tolson; rape, Lorenzo Stancil, 26, colored.

Frank H. Ellis Succeeds Keen In Postal Place

Frank H. Ellis, assistant superintendent of the division of Postoffice Service, was named yesterday as chief clerk of the Postoffice Department, succeeding Owen A. Keen, who died March 28.

ELLIS

A former postal inspector, Ellis has served in the Postoffice Department for 30 years. He is a native of New York and entered the postal service in Atlanta, Ga., October 1, 1910. He had been in charge of the service division for the last six years. He lives at 4713 Blagden avenue northwest.

Church Young People Urge City-Wide Campaign on Rats

A city-wide campaign to fight rats has been started by a young people's group of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church in cooperation with the Temple Center, Tenth and M streets northwest.

Originally beginning with a rat extermination project in the Temple Center area three weeks ago, the group now hopes to stir public opinion to demand a special rodent control expert in the District health office. Mrs. Arthur W. Dudley, 1606 Upshur street northwest, who has aided the young people in their program, said such a petition was being sought for presentation to Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer.

Special Demonstration

At 10 a. m. Saturday the group will give a practical demonstration of the latest rat-exterminating methods at a meeting in the Temple Center.

Speakers from the Department of Agriculture and a representative of the Health Department are expected to aid in the discussion.

Another purpose of the meeting will be to determine the relative success of the work done in that area by the young people's group and to complete this program.

Special Bait Is Distributed

The group distributed from house to house a specially processed rat-killing chemical. According to Agriculture Department experts, the mixture was supposed to paralyze rats, but would prove harmless to other animals.

In charge of the rat-extermination program at the Temple Center is Mrs. Minnie W. Federson. Aid of other church and youth groups is hoped for in the program, which includes discussions on cleaning out alleys, rat-proofing homes, and conducting community campaigns.

Veterans Employes Aided by Ruling

A revision of Veterans Administration rules benefiting "nearly 9,000" employes at hospital facilities was announced yesterday by Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Effective May 1, the new rules will permit veterans' hospital employes to take two meals a day off the station without penalty. Heretofore, the price of three meals daily has been deducted from their pay.

Pointing out that the deduction for meals has been $22.50 month, Gen. Hines stated that under the new rules, the deduction could be only $7.50.

Air Corps Chooses DustStormLanding As Heroic Feat

A young Army flier who, last December, took his chances on a forced landing in a dust storm rather than possibly abandon a passenger, was formally named the Air Corps hero of the year yesterday.

Secretary Woodring presented the Cheney Award to Lieut. Harold L. Neely in a brief ceremony attended by the Army high command.

The pilot, assigned to Lowry Field, Colo., brought his plane down blind with engines stalled.

Disarmament Condition

Testifying before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee yesterday, Admiral Harold R. Stark raised a point to which the American people, still securely at peace and therefore still in a position to think clearly, should be giving serious consideration.

The chief of naval operations had been asked by a committee member if he believed the present emergency construction program would have to be continued even after a termination of hostilities in Europe. To this the Admiral replied that he personally would be delighted: "If I thought we could get a disarmament conference and if I thought the other fellow would live up to it."

The emphasis on two distinct conditions for a reduction of armaments is important. A mere disarmament conference, no matter what paper accord might be reached, would clearly be inadequate to inspire confidence. Mistrust between nations is now so great that none would place any reliance on a treaty or agreement which could be surreptitiously ignored by its signatories.

As Admiral Stark implies, any future treaty for curtailment of armaments will be worthless if it does not simultaneously provide for an international control commission empowered to see that it is observed. That means, of course, that each participating nation will not only have representatives on the control board, but also that each signatory will agree to having its naval yards examined periodically by foreign officers.

That will, of course, be an encroachment on the traditional concept of national sovereignty, the anarchy of which is largely responsible for the present state of the world. But without that encroachment on sovereignty there will, even with peace in Europe, be no stopping the continuous upward trend of armament costs.

The United States, no less than other great powers, must eventually choose between bankruptcy from swollen military expenses or some degree of international supervision, in which we shall accept oversight from others as an offset to the extension of our oversight to them.

Carol's Tight-Rope

The repercussions of Germany's lightning invasion of Scandinavia are being felt in every corner of Europe. The small neutrals are now torn between the hope that the war in Norway will vouchsafe them a breathing spell by keeping Germany fully occupied for a time and the fear that the opening up of the struggle will mean its extension to areas still enjoying a precarious peace.

Of these neutrals, none has been in more constant peril since the war began than Rumania. That peril has not diminished as a result of the Scandinavian developments. On the contrary, as the war moves from a passive to an active stage, Germany's dependence on Rumanian supplies, particularly oil and cereals, tends greatly to increase. Yet the pressure from Germany is only one of many pressures to which Carol's kingdom is and has been subjected.

The Bucharest government must take into account the possibility that Germany's penetration of Scandinavia may be followed by a Russian attempt to seize Bessarabia. In that connection the Rumanian leaders are keeping an ever-watchful eye on the Soviet Union which, according to rumors, is massing troops near the Rumanian border. Rumania must also reckon with the chronic antagonism of Hungary and Bulgaria and persistent pressure from the Allies to cut down her shipments of essential products to the Third Reich.

Thus far King Carol has walked his tight-rope with notable skill. But his country's plight is parlous. A decline in agricultural production has seriously reduced Rumania's capacity to export cereals. In an effort to husband diminishing reserves, the Bucharest government recently placed a ban on cereal exports. That action, in addition to the fact that oil shipments to the Reich have been well below the volume agreed upon, may tend to draw the Nazi lightning in Rumania's direction.

As an offset, therefore, the Rumanian Senate, despite the opposition of army leaders, has just voted to approve a 30-year lease to Germany of 100,000 acres of timber. Since the full exploitation of this concession would take some time the Bucharest authorities may feel that the risk of an extension of German influence can be taken if, in the meantime, the grant of this lease helps mollify the Reich.

Like a ship in a submarine infested ocean, Rumania is perforce compelled to follow a zig-zag course. And there can be no assurance in Bucharest that such policy will necessarily save Rumania from the fate which has befallen Finland, Denmark and Norway and which stares all other neutrals in the face.

Unchecked Lobbying

Gov. Black's efforts to arouse sentiment in favor of the Jones-Wheeler bill by franking propaganda to Federal Land Bank borrowers is certainly a very questionable procedure. And, as Congressman Reed charges, it may be a violation of the Antilobbying Act and the more recent statute forbidding officials to disseminate reports, bulletins or other documents without request from the recipient.

In sending out his circular-letters the head of the Farm Credit Administration did not specifically ask Land Bank borrowers to write to their Congressmen. But there is a suggestion to this effect in his expression of hope that Secretary Wallace's proposals will be discussed and that "many farmers will have things they will wish to contribute to our thinking on the subject." The legislation in question is not awaiting action by Secretary Wallace or Gov. Black. It is pending before Congress. Secretary Wallace had already given Congress his advice when the circulars were sent out. So the solicitation would seem to be for farmer advice to Congress, not to the FCA.

There can be little doubt that this is precisely the sort of back-door lobbying that Congress intended to prevent. At present, however, the door seems to be wide open to Administration lobbyists who seek to bring pressure to bear upon either the Senate or House. The statute forbidding the spending of Federal money for this purpose has never been properly enforced. Now there are increasing indications that the Department of Justice has no intention of enforcing it.

Attorney General Jackson declined to render an opinion to the Smith Committee as to whether lobbying activities by officials of the National Labor Relations Board constitute a violation of the law. He offered to cooperate in preparing a clarifying amendment to the act. But, after consultation with legislative experts of the House, Mr. Smith concluded that the present statute is clearly applicable to the lobbying activities of the NLRB. So he once more wrote to Mr. Jackson a month ago asking that the law be enforced.

No reply to this request has been received. Nor, so far as can be ascertained, has any investigation into the lobbying of NLRB officials been made. If this is to be the final reply of the Department of Justice to a Congressional request for enforcement, then the statute in question is a dead letter. And any administrative agency will be free to bring pressure upon Congress, using Federal equipment and facilities to carry its appeals to voters.

Such far-reaching consequences of inaction in these cases should not be overlooked at the Department of Justice. No doubt Mr. Jackson is under political pressure to ignore unlawful official lobbying in a campaign year. But if he follows the excellent advice he recently gave his district attorneys, that will not sway him from a thorough investigation of the pressure tactics employed by both the NLRB and the FCA.

The G. O. P. Seeks Youth

The selection of Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota as keynoter at the Republican National Convention has met with enthusiastic approval. Even voters who have no interest in the G. O. P. are inclined to welcome the novel prospect of a keynote address that will simultaneously contribute ideas and economize on time.

Republicans who are running for office seem particularly pleased that the committee on arrangements for the Philadelphia convention had the good judgment to bring the young Governor of Minnesota into the limelight. Despite his youth, Gov. Stassen has made an impressive record at St. Paul. In addition to being a good speaker and a skillful politician, he is a student of government and a conscientious public servant. The reputation he has built up in the Middle West might reasonably have induced him to make a bid for the Presidential nomination if his age—just 33—did not make him legally ineligible for the highest elective office.

Gov. Stassen's good record, however, is only one of several factors which influenced his selection as keynoter. The Republican Party is obviously trying to shake off the handicaps which contributed to its defeat in 1932. By selecting a young man who was just beginning a legal practice when the depression struck, the G. O. P. doubtless hopes to forestall some Democratic thrusts.

The developing strategy of the Republicans is clearly to make that party the standard-bearer of forward-looking youth, in contrast to what its candidates call the "defeatism" of the New Deal. This plan was apparent in the program outlined by the Glenn Frank committee. It is also evident in the comparative youth of the leading Republican aspirants for the Presidential nomination.

The Barden Bill

The Barden bill scheduled to come before the House this week would extend the exemptions of the Wages and Hours Act to probably 1,000,000 workers engaged in the handling and processing of farm products. Workers in canneries, fruit and vegetable packing plants, and other processing establishments are among the lowest paid groups in the country. Opponents of the Barden bill persuasively contend that its passage would withdraw the protection of minimum-wage legislation from those most in need of it, lead to demands for further exemptions and defeat the purpose of the law.

Certainly the Barden bill is highly discriminatory in according exemptions to agricultural processors and their employes while denying them to other groups. If it is bad for the farmer to have the cost of processing fruits and vegetables raised by compulsory increases in wages paid by canneries, it is also disadvantageous to have the price of the farmer's clothing raised by applying minimum-wage laws to textile workers. Furthermore, if we accept the thesis that an industry unable to pay decent wages has no right to survive, the effect of minimum-wage legislation upon the farmer is an irrelevant consideration.

The Fair Labor Standards Act unquestionably ought to be amended, but revision might profitably be delayed until the new administrator has had more time to perfect his organization and show what can be accomplished under a decentralized administration. The enforcement task is immensely difficult and virtually certain to prove impossible without the whole-hearted cooperation of State officials.

Heretofore the Wage-Hour Division has been severely handicapped by lack of funds, and by the inevitable delays of developing a new regulatory mechanism. With more money to spend and with more experience to draw upon, a better showing is to be expected. But under the best conditions, the Federal Government cannot effectively police thousands of establishments employing millions of workers unless community sentiment supports the laws and employers and employes do a good job of self-regulation.

The work of bringing violators of this act to book by investigating complaints is extremely arduous. Up to last December the Wage-Hour Division had received more than 32,000 complaints involving 25,000 establishments. It concluded that between 15,000 and 16,000 of these complaints were valid and should be looked into. But at the end of the year it had completed only 2,138 inspections, had 1,999 cases still under investigation, and 11,410 cases still unassigned.

This record constitutes no reflection upon the pitifully inadequate inspection force of the division. But it does emphasize the folly of passing regulatory legislation of far-reaching character without stopping to consider the difficulties of enforcement.

A great mistake was made initially in providing for comprehensive coverage of industries in all parts of the country. The establishment of uniform minimum-wage rates and maximum-hour standards was likewise a blunder. What we need is a careful overhauling of the law to make it more workable and less rigid. Its inherent defects would only be increased by introducing discriminatory exemptions such as those carried in the Barden bill.

Vital Statistic

If the late unlamented census controversy served no other purpose, it at least brought to public attention the social necessity of accurate statistical information. In spite of Senator Tobey, reports indicate that census takers have so far met with a minimum of trouble on their rounds, and future Government statistics, therefore, promise to be as reliable as possible.

One Government statistician, however, is independently putting the accuracy of Federal calculations to judicial test by suing a naval officer for $10,000 damages for breach of promise. It would seem that the decision of the District Court in this case must inevitably be a generalized commentary on Government statistics, as well as a specific judgment on this computation in particular.

One thought in connection with the complaint refuses to be downed. It is perplexing that a professional statistician should be willing to estimate anything, even the value of a lost love, in round figures. It would be more in keeping with statistical tradition if the lady were suing for $9,999.98 or perhaps for $10,002.01.

"There is little difference between Republicans and Democrats," says Representative Bruce Barton. The same thing has been said about the sexes. But there are cases in which a little difference makes a lot of difference.

In civil service examinations for appointive positions, why doesn't the examiner ask, "Whom do you know?" instead of "What do you know?"

And even if we could see ourselves as others see us, we would think it was an optical illusion.

Answers "Critic"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In view of the alarming situation in Europe our Government has seen fit to concentrate the greater portion of our none-too-large army in the South for important and necessary training. These maneuvers, the largest ever held in this country, are preparing our soldiers to face whatever dangers may threaten our country in the future.

With this in mind the authorities at the War Department realized that the small forces left on nearby posts would be insufficient to stage a proper dress parade on Army Day as had been staged on previous Army Days. Therefore, they resolved to make the best of circumstances and give the public of this city a glimpse of their fighting men in fighting garb.

Despite these extenuating circumstances, however, there is one among us who had the bad grace to raise his voice in childish criticism of the show put on by the army in the Army Day parade. This gentleman, who is living safely on this side of the ocean behind the protection of the service he criticizes, has the nerve to boast of European military displays and to belittle the army which is guarding his safety.

It is odious, to say the least, to hear one of our own fellow citizens boasting of the doings of a Europe which has made such a hash of its own affairs. Our Government is doing its utmost to prepare the American Army for any threat to these shores. In doing this it has no time to waste in providing gaudy spectacles for the amusement of such people as the gentleman who signs himself "critic."

Stadium Standees

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have just heard announced over the radio, in tones of civic pride, that there were 2,000 standees at the opening baseball game at Griffith Stadium. Yes, and among those standees were many who had bought reserved-seat tickets and found the seats taken when they arrived.

It was inconsiderate of the club management to sell those extra tickets and admit the buyers to the stands, where unoccupied seats were promptly rushed.

These amusement enterprises would be considerate of the public if they had to pay for their advertising as other business enterprises do. The railroads serving Washington do not sell their tickets to speculators during the Cherry Blossom festival. When we order a meal in a restaurant, the waiter doesn't give it to another customer and expect us to pay for it.

The amusement people can treat us badly and still make money, because you newspapers give them so much free advertising. Why not boom some other business for a change, if you must give away your valuable space for nothing?

School For Delinquents

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Regarding the appropriation to the Board of Public Welfare for educational work, there are a few things which are still a question. At Industrial Home School there are now four experienced teachers, especially trained for work with delinquent children. The plan evidently is to remove these teachers out to regular schools operated by the Board of Education, and replace them by teachers whose qualifications are questionable.

There will be needed for such a school, books, paper, pencils, hand work material and other standard equipment. There is also the question of a teacher's superior officer, who must necessarily know teaching techniques in order to be able to supervise his teachers efficiently. If, then, a school is to be operated at Industrial Home under the Board of Public Welfare, where is the building equipment to come from? Who is to be the supervisor? Where is the money to pay for these very important things to come from?

The appropriation is certainly not enough to cover these bare necessities satisfactorily. If, then, this bill is passed as an economy measure, where is the economy? Children are committed to Industrial Home because of unfortunate home conditions and because of delinquency. In the light of all the talk and work on juvenile delinquency are we, as a thinking people, going to victimize these children further by providing anything but the best in their education? Do they not deserve the same opportunity for education that more fortunate children in the regular schools enjoy?

Substitute For The Randolph Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In The Sunday Post of April 7 you carried an editorial under the caption "Victims of Fraud" in which passage was urged of the bill by Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee which would require the registration of all liens on motor vehicles in the District of Columbia with the director of vehicles and traffic.

In this connection, I wish to make it perfectly clear that I am in hearty accord with the spirit of the bill and the evils it seeks to correct and have myself sought enactment of similar legislation in previous years. my only contention being that the function is now performed in the office of the Recorder of Deeds and should continue to be performed in that office.

The fact that this function is being performed by this office at the present time has nothing to do with the contention that the public is not sufficiently protected. There is no law on the statute books that requires an individual or firm to record his liens, and that fact is largely responsible for the fraud complained of by purchasers of second-hand automobiles.

Some time ago, at my suggestion, Congressman Schulte introduced a bill in the House, and Senator Reynolds introduced an identical measure in the Senate, to eliminate this unjust practice.

On Monday, April 8, representatives of various organizations appeared before the House District Committee and, in support of the Randolph bill, contended that our fee for recording liens is too high, and that this office indexed liens by name only, wherein automobile liens should be indexed by engine number. These two features comprised the bone of their contention that the Randolph bill should pass.

Everyone familiar with the District of Columbia code will know that it specifically provides for the present system of recording these liens. They will likewise know that Congress sets the fees for this office.

Those who have followed my work as recorder of deeds will know that I have realized that the fee for recording liens is too high and have sought for sometime to have it reduced to 50 cents. When it was called to my attention that better protection could be afforded the public if liens on automobiles were recorded by engine number as well as by name, I readily agreed to such a procedure, and went further in suggesting legislation requiring this office to certify to the director of vehicles and traffic daily a record of all liens recorded in this office.

In the House of Representatives on April 10, 1940, Congressman Kennedy, of Maryland, introduced H. R. 9331, a bill that embodies all of the suggestions I have outlined and excludes none that the Randolph measure provides, with the exception that the Kennedy bill would leave the function of recording liens in the office of the recorder of deeds.

This office has had conversations with Mr. Wender, of the Federation of Citizens Associations, and Mr. Cleveland, of the American Automobile Association, who have been active in support of the Randolph measure. Both have stated that it would make little difference where the work was done, provided that the procedure and provisions of the Randolph measure were followed.

I am certain that they will get behind the Kennedy measure and urge its passage, inasmuch as the main bone of contention of those Congressmen who have opposed the bill has been based on their belief that the function should not be transferred from its present department.

British School Girl

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I am a British schoolgirl and, like all young Britons, love and admire America.

I felt ashamed of my country in September 1938 when your politicians, press, and films so boldly condemned Hitler and called for a firm stand against him. How feeble and cowardly seemed our struggle for peace.

But our isolationists — Hitler's dupes, these—said "mind Britain's business."

And our "appeasers" said that after all the Sudetenland people were chiefly German, and Hitler said he didn't want one Czech and that he had "no more territorial claims."

I remember seeing "The March of Time" film after the Munich agreement, and it said that Britain had "quailed before the might of Hitler." I was only a kid of thirteen, so I don't mind admitting that I went home and sobbed my heart out.

Yet now that we have so reluctantly given up the comfort, security and happiness of peace, we find ourselves lumped with Germans as "belligerents," treated like quarrelsome, naughty boys, to be scolded by all the good boys, the neutrals.

By all means, like Little Jack Horner, "Stick in your thumb and pull out a plum" of peace, if you're sure it won't upset your digestion.

But won't you please spare us that smug "what a good boy am I!"

Third Time

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Well, they're at it again.

In 1812 the English came to us with their arms out—and burned our Capitol.

In 1914 they came to us with their hands out—and got our all.

In 1940 they will come to us with their necks out — but we have learned our lesson.

Oral Immigrants

Many of the words that go to make up the average American's vocabulary became naturalized citizens of the language after more circuitous travels than those of the ancestors of the people making daily use of them. Some have come up in the world from the humblest of beginnings, others have fallen from a high estate.

Take baron, in Europe the holder of an hereditary title of nobility, in America a capitalist who controls commodity markets. A fine, high-sounding word, that. Originally it meant a fool, coming from the Latin "baro," a dolt. It was a term first applied to soldiers serving in the lowest ranks, then to military chiefs and leaders, finally to the commanders of hosts of armed men.

The reverse of this is seen in our word slave, which today signifies a servile menial, but comes from the Slavonic "slav," and once meant noble and illustrious.

If we say a person's silly today we imply that he was behind the door when brains were distributed, but our modern silly comes from the old German "selig," meaning blessed, and in the early hymns and nursery rhymes we find allusions to "the harmless, silly infant Jesus," and an old Christmas carol bids the shepherds

"Rise and leave your silly sheep," which doesn't mean the sheep were stupid, but merely harmless and innocent.

It isn't hard to see how the changed meaning came about, though. The innocent and holy have been prey to the astute and worldly time out of mind, and so eventually the term silly lost all its complimentary significance, and came to mean gullible or foolish.

Charing Cross, which means a London railway station to most of us, stands as a monument to the Englishman's love of short pronunciation of long words, and was originally a funeral marker, erected to the "chere Reine" (dear Queen) Eleanor, wife of Edward I of England. When she died at Herdelie, near Lincoln, Edward determined she should be entombed at Westminster, and her body was borne up to London with great pomp and ceremony.

At every town at which the cortege rested on its march Edward caused a "crosse of cunning workmanship" to be erected in remembrance of her. There were 14 of these crosses altogether, but only three remain, one at Waltham, one at Northampton, one at Geddington in Northamptonshire. The cross that stands before the railway station in the Strand is a replica of the one erected to the memory of the "chere Reine Eleanor" by Edward's command, the original having been torn down by order of the Puritanical Parliament in 1647.

To be alert means to be vigilant. It ought to. The word alert comes from the old French "a l'erte," meaning to stand on watch. And when we say a diamond weighs so many carats we have reference to the carat seed, or seed of the Abyssinian coral flower, used by medieval goldsmiths as units of weight.

Shakespeare, in the "Comedy of Errors," refers to this when (Act iv, Scene i) he makes Angelo tell Antipholus of Ephesus:

"Here's the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat."

Believe it or doubt it, when we talk about a canopy we're speaking about gnats. It's from the old Greek konops, which meant a gnat, and Herodotus is responsible for its getting into the language. In the history of his travels (ii, 95) he gravely states that fishermen along the Nile lift their nets on poles and sleep soundly under them, untroubled by insects, as gnats will not pass through the meshes of a net, no matter how coarse they be. Subsequently the tester or mosquito-net of a bed in Europe was known as a canopy (gnat curtain) and finally the ceremonial cloths borne over kings and high ecclesiastics came to be so called.

A rival originally meant one who dwelt across a river from another, and derives from the Latin "rivalis," a riverman, for, as Aurelianus Caelius declared five centuries before Christ, "there is no more fruitful source of contention than river-right, both with beasts and men, not only for the benefit of the waters, but also because rivers are natural boundaries."

Ever have the telephone call you from an extra Sunday morning nap, or the bathroom, only to find some gentleman on the other end of the wire inquiring if you wouldn't like to buy a section in a community mausoleum? Where did he get that word, anyway? Why do we call those mortuary apartment houses mausoleums (or mausolea, if you want to be classical about it)?

Why, from their fancied resemblance to the great monumental edifice which Artemisia, Queen of Caria, erected to her husband (who was also her brother) Mausolus, at Halicarnassus in 353 B. C. Incidentally, not the least spectacular of this versatile lady's exploits was the drinking of her husband-brother's ashes dissolved in wine.

A harmless, even cheery modern word with a grim ancestry is bonfire, which once meant a blaze kindled to burn proscribed books, the symbols of heresy, and, if they could catch him, the heretic himself.

And "cliche" in its native French means literally a stereotype or electrotype plate; so to the logically minded Frenchman one who takes his thought predigested and repeats what he's heard rather than what he's thought up for himself speaks "cliches," or merely duplicates another's words.

When it comes to contractions, the language fairly teems with them. Take, for casual example, nowadays. It's just a telescoping of the more ponderous "in our days"—in our days. Say it fast, you'll get what I mean.

Today And Tomorrow

Peace And Military Decision

THE QUESTION, on which almost everything depends, is whether the great struggle in which all the nations are involved can be decided and finished in this war between Germany and the Allies.

The struggle is much larger than this war. For Japan, Russia, Italy, Turkey, and the United States are involved in the struggle. They are not belligerents in this war. But none is indifferent and unconcerned. Some have ambitions which they hope to realize and some have vital interests which they know they must defend; all are preparing themselves in accordance with their resources, their understanding of the issues, and the capacity of their leaders. With good luck and sufficient wisdom in their policy some of them may never become belligerents in this war. But unless this war can be ended decisively, the struggle is bound to continue and, therefore, to break out quickly and at many points all over the globe in a series of other wars.

IT IS NECESSARY, therefore to realize thoroughly why and how the struggle is fatally destined to go on until in this war, or in other wars which grow out of it, there is a decision which is so conclusive that all the great nations can and will abide by it. The fundamental reason is that the nations are now mobilized and there is no conceivable way in which they can again demobilize until the conviction is general and unchallenged that there can be no great war for two generations at the least.

Without that much of a guaranty of peace for the future the millions of men now under arms and at work in the armament industries cannot hope to return to their ordinary trades and occupations. For the jobs from which they have been mobilized no longer exist, and civilian jobs cannot now be restored until there has been restored security against war and confidence in the continuation of peace.

WE MUST FIX in mind what the mobilization of Europe means. To begin with there are the millions of men in the armies, the air forces, the navies. Many of them are peasants and if the war ended, they at least would return to their farms and eke out a living. But many millions are young men between the ages of 17 and say 23 who have never had a real job, who, when the war ends, will return to the cities looking for work. Many millions more are men in the late twenties and up to about 50 years of age who have left jobs where they worked on products that were sold abroad, or in shops which dealt in the small commerce of cities and villages and the little luxuries of the people of small means, or in the professions which were already crowded when the war began. These jobs, these shops, these professions are not there waiting for their return; they will have to be recreated by the restoration of commerce, by the saving and the investment of large sums of capital.

But the men in uniform are only a fraction of the men who are now engaged in work which is entirely devoted to war. There are thousands upon thousands in the airplane factories, the gun factories, the shipyards; there are multitudes engaged in making uniforms, and explosives. There are vast numbers engaged in the immense bureaucracy of war, in the administrative control of every form of activity, in censorship, in the secret police, in air raid defense. There are millions of refugees, of people evacuated from the danger zones, and in all the regions upon which Hitler has laid his hands countless men, women and children without homes or jobs.

To restore to a normal life and to peaceable jobs these millions of war workers and war victims is one of the most tremendous tasks that ever confronted mankind: it will be absolutely impossible even to begin to carry it out unless there is a certainty that it is safe to demobilize both the soldiers and the war workers and, also, that it is safe to invest the huge capital sums which will be required in order to create normal jobs for them.

BUT THAT is not the whole of the picture which we have to fix in our minds. Not only are millions of men mobilized in uniform and specialized war industries but, in addition, virtually all the capital resources of Europe are mobilized as well. In order to create the armies and supply them, almost all the savings of all the people of Europe have had to be invested, without much hope of getting the savings out again; they have had to be invested in buildings, machines, engines of war, and materials which are being consumed totally or will be in peace time a vast encumbrance. Moreover, the existing peacetime plant,—railroads, factories, houses, power stations, mines, ships,—is being used up because it is not possible to find the funds to keep the plant in good maintenance. To set the industrial system going again so that it will serve even the minimum needs of the non-combatants plus the returned soldiers plus the war workers, it will be necessary to invest huge sums. Those sums will not be saved and they cannot be borrowed unless a peace of at the very least 30 years—a peace, we might say, that would last as long as the life of a long-term bond—is definitely assured.

THE RETURN of Europe to a civilian way of living will be immensely difficult even if peace seems perfectly assured. But, of course, there will not be even the faintest promise of security as long as in the heart of Europe there remains a regime, like Hitler's, which has both the will and the power to destroy its neighbors without notice and in a few hours. Nobody will dare to demobilize. Nobody will dare to cancel the contracts for making airplanes, tanks, guns, and warships. Nobody will dare to open up his frontiers and let the Nazis come in freely. Nobody will dare to open up markets to normal trade. No nation will dare to turn its capital from the support of armies and armaments to private industry or even to civilian public works and social services.

"Even if he promised peace, even if he meant it . . . he could not keep the promise."

The same conditions, only in more aggravated form, will prevail inside Germany if it should happen that Hitler won this war or even got out of it with an inconclusive peace. For he cannot, even if it were in his nature to wish to do it, put his soldiers and war workers into normal jobs. This immense transformation of German life cannot be carried out without loans from the outside and without very free access to the markets, not merely of Europe, but of Asia, Africa, and above all the Americas.

Therefore, if Hitler promised peace, and even if he meant it when he promised it, he could not keep the promise. For what kind of civilian work can he provide for his troops and armament workers? He is bound to keep them mobilized. Otherwise, they will be a seething mass of unemployed. It follows that the only way he could hope to make Europe and the world accept his victory, and supply him with materials, would be by continuing to terrorize the world.

HITLER'S GERMANY, and the mobilization which his ambitions and his methods have imposed upon Europe, have created a vicious circle which cannot be broken unless this war ends in his downfall. Demobilization in Europe and elsewhere is a practical impossibility until Nazi Germany is brought to a moral and military disarmament.

That is why so much depends upon whether a military decision can be reached in the present war between the Allies and Germany. If there is a stalemate, then, as we have seen, there can be no demobilization and therefore peace can be no more than a dangerously explosive truce. If Hitler should defeat Britain and France, then this war will at once become a much greater war. For then the Italians, the Russians, and the Japanese will have not only the incentive but will be under the necessity, not so much of helping Hitler as of striking quickly, in order to get in with him, but also ahead of him, at the vital strategic points, now held by the Allies, at the points on which depend the control of the seas and the colonial empires of Britain, France, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and Portugal.

Just as Stalin could not let Hitler take Poland without occupying a portion of Poland himself, so if Hitler appears to be on the point of striking a fatal blow at the Allies, Italy will have to strike in the Mediterranean at Gibraltar, at the Balkans and at Suez, Russia in Scandinavia, the Balkans, and the Middle East, Japan in the Southwestern Pacific. If the Allied power crumbles in northern Europe, these moves will not follow slowly; they will follow instantly in a series of lightning strokes executed as ruthlessly and with as little warning as Hitler's seizure of Norway.

BUT EVEN THEN there will be no peace, not even the peace of the conquerors. Even if the conquerors were firm and faithful allies, their methods are such that what they take by force they can hold only by force. They can never win the consent of their victims, only their acquiescence; and they can never trust one another, for each knows the appetites of the others. And so, since their victory must engender conflict among themselves and with others, and also an unending resistance, it can never bring any kind of peace whatever, not even their kind of peace, to the world.

The German Reptile

I HAVE NEVER been able to confirm this, because the performers refuse to hold still in my presence, but I have read, and willingly believe, that birds sometimes become hypnotized or fascinated by snakes and, with wings to fly, are unable to stir. They just twitter their silly heads off until a certain psychological moment when they become all unbuttoned from sudden realization of the horrible thing that is about to befall them. And then it happens.

Although I never have seen this, I am willing to believe that it can and does happen, because it has happened recently in Europe, and the early stages of the same phenomenon are now proceeding in the United States. The Norwegians knew that the German reptile was the natural enemy of all peoples other than the German, who have elected themselves the chosen people, and they understood in their hearts that to be conquered by the Nazis meant subjugation and the destruction of their civilization. But, even knowing this, and with the tragic examples of Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland to warn them, they still twittered, and in the final hours were struck dumb and helpless. They couldn't even stir, and some elements of their nation actually helped the monster to devour them.

THIS IS happening in the United States. There are many Americans who, like the Norwegians in the presence of the Nazis, still insist that the Germans mean no harm to those who do not attack them, when it is written throughout Hitler's book and his speeches, and all the propaganda of his hideous revolutionary machine, that the Germans are by race the chosen people, selected by the German God to conquer all others by treachery and cunning at first and, finally, by a stab of the fangs which dulls the senses and reduces the victims to helplessness.

If it is to be argued—and it is argued—that the Norwegians had permitted the British to violate their neutrality and had thus invited attack or "pacification," surely it will not be claimed that Czecho-Slovakia was a victim of the same error, and yet Czecho-Slovakia fell in the same way to the ambitions and obsessions of the chosen people.

Many Americans are casting about for reasons not to believe their own intelligence. England conquered the Boers, England persecuted Ireland and England twice made war on the United States, but none of these truths alters the fact that in the last few months—so recently that the spectacle is still fresh and the graves of the dead have yet to sprout their first green fuzz—the chosen people of Adolf Hitler first poisoned and then devoured independent nations of better spiritual and intellectual quality than the Germans. If the British conduct was so bad, by what process is the German conduct found excusable?

There was no act of provocation by the little nations, no declaration of war by the chosen people, and those who miserably excuse their wish to disbelieve their own intelligence by blaming the iniquities of the Versailles Treaty by the same method would justify horrors utterly unprovoked and immeasurably more frightful.

THE VERSAILLES Treaty, whatever its cruelties, was but a love lyric by comparison with the terms of peace which the Germans were preparing to impose had they won the first World War, and the conquerors in that war did not attempt to enslave the Germans forever. They even refrained from occupying their cities behind the frontier. But even if it be granted that the Versailles Treaty was as bad as the chosen people themselves have said, its conditions were kindly by comparison with the ferocity of the German conquests. And yet Versailles is deplored and the slaughter of free nations by the victims of that perfidy is condoned.

The Nazi war against the civilized world is the war of Bolshevism under the Swastika. Every American objection to the hated Communist applies to the Nazi, and every alarm that has been raised by the Nazis and their agents and dupes in the United States against the Jews applies to the ambitions of Hitler's chosen people, who have proclaimed their mission and their right to reduce all other peoples to subhuman status and to rule the world.

The snake is hissing and weaving, and the bird is beginning to think the monster has been misunderstood and maligned. That is what the Norwegians thought.

The Age Of The Tramp

THERE WAS an age of sail, and there was an age of steam, and the ships of the future will be better, for men and for cargo, than wind or coal-driven tramps ever were. Now, there will always be seamen to sing the glories of the good old days, but rarely do you find a seagoing veteran like Chief Engineer William McFee who can write with an affection for old ways that sets your blood a-tingling yet who welcomes the new. He calls his new book "Watch Below: A Reconstruction in Narrative Form of the Golden Age of Steam, When Coal Took the Place of Wind and the Tramp Steamer's Smoke Covered the Seven Seas" (Random House, $3), and it is all of that, and more.

If you've an orderly mind, you may not like it. Mr. McFee begins his book as semi-autobiography (son of a retired shipmaster, he himself first went to sea at the age of 24, in 1906), soon picks up an older third engineer to carry his tale back a bit and finally signs on the whole roster of a rolling tramp called the Wyvenhoe. He begins, too, with an apostrophe to the ships of the future and a denunciation of the stupid, grinding shipowners of the past; his love for the hard life he knew soon wipes that off the slate.

It was an age of oil lamps at sea—shipowners were doddering conservatives, proud of their suspicions of expensive new "patents;" there was no heat in the cabins and no bathrooms aboard ship; after the second day at sea the meat was all salt horse, for the tramps carried no ice; and when a ship left port it vanished into a world of its own. There was no radio. The captains were martinets who had learned their trade under the necessities of sail, and they believed in unnecessary work for work's own sake.

It was a terrible life, says McFee, and it was a grand breeding ground of character. From the captain to the socialist coal passer, all good seamen swore they worked for wages only, but somehow they all knew that the ship was more than the crew, and acted on that knowledge with "principle"—a special word in McFee's vocabulary—and with passion. Times are different in these days of trade-union crews, he laments, and hurries on to say it's good they are.

ANY WRITER of sea literature will do well to pore over McFee's pages; his "narrative" is constantly interrupted by testy corrections of landlubber phraseology. I'll never dare speak again of a "rusty old tramp." Only a new ship is rusty. I've learned, because the coat of red-lead paint beneath its first coat of black shows through, the plates have been bruised, and she shows every mark. "An old tramp has dozens of coats of black paint on her. She may be dingy if the weather has been bad, because of salt spray, but never rusty."

On those old ships the captain carried a box of books, never read them and never permitted his inferiors to touch them. No one in the forecastle read anything but tattered magazines. That's another way times change. Sea libraries are an essential part of any proper modern freighter. Today, McFee says, "so long as he does not have to buy them, a seaman will read astonishingly learned works," anything from astrology to yoga, not disdaining last year's novels.

The Once Over

Mutuels Hit New York

DEAR ED: Well, I see New York, which was so slow to understand what was going on all over the rest of the country, is still dizzy over the way the crowds turn out to bet hundreds of thousands per hour in bum weather and on fields so small that the use of a starting gate is mere flattery. The first warm day is going to see the betting arrangements at them old-fashioned Gotham tracks so swamped that for every $2 bet there will be $50 shut out. The bettors' attitude toward the mutuels is that it is strictly a battle between the "haves" and the "have nots" and they and the latter think the answer to the new economic order is the tote board.

You wouldn't believe that a big city crowd could be so backward in its understanding of mutuel betting. A lot of fans are still looking at the tote board and insisting it is a new numbers game. I heard a born and bred Brooklynite shout "Bingo!" when a number he had been waiting for was flashed, and any number of New Yorkers showed their ignorance by asking, "What does that word 'pool' in electric lights mean? Do they have swimming races, too?"

Opening day under the mutuels in New York saw the worst jam I ever saw at a track except at the Derby and a few great stake races at other tracks, and if you think it was just due to the novelty you are all wrong, because there is no more gullible crowd in the world than you will find in and around the metropolis. These folks will cause such an overflow this season in the old-fashioned country fair courses of the Civil War era which New York calls race tracks that the horses won't have room for racing.

They are so antique by all modern standards that when a stranger first sees one he thinks it is a setting from a period drama. Anyone would think the uniformed program sellers are some of Gen. Sherman's men and would not be surprised to run across Rhett Butler at a $2 window any minute.

The native New Yorkers were a little slow grasping the meaning of all those figures on the tote board. I heard one fellow squawk: "How can I tell the odds? Them figures keep changing all the time." And a friend of mine from Brooklyn was so confused by all the electric lights that he insisted he was watching election returns.

I was pretty confused myself. When I saw a window marked "Information" I walked up and asked the fellow for the winner of the next race, but he just gave me a dirty look.

The effect of the mutuels on the horses was very bad. A beetle named Cantovino took a look at the tote board, saw more than 15 people were betting on him to win and had to be dragged to the post. A hide named Peace Day saw over $30 had been bet on him to show, so he threw his jockey and tried to run out of the park. Yours truly,

The New Deal Gains A Respite

IF IT WERE possible to isolate our domestic politics from the war, the domestic situation would be simple. It is illustrated by the status of two measures now before the House—the Walter-Logan bill to restrain the New Deal alphabetical agencies, and the proposed amending of the National Labor Relations Act.

To understand the present stage, go back to the beginning. The time was early 1937, when President Roosevelt sent his Court measure to Congress, and there arose a wave of "sit-down" strikes, which the Administration condoned. Those two events marked the beginning of a tide away from the New Deal. The tide became conspicuous in the elections of November, 1938. In those elections every Democrat whom Mr. Roosevelt had attempted to purge, was returned to the Senate; some radical New Dealers, notably Congressman Maury Maverick, lost their seats; the Republicans almost doubled their membership of the House, from 90 to 169.

The new Congress then elected—it was the same Congress now sitting—met in January, 1939. It was, if not an anti-New Deal Congress, at least a "check the New Deal" one. Since this Congress first sat it can almost be said to have passed no measure that was an advance of the New Deal. (Reenactment of the trade pact was just that, a reenactment, not an advance; besides, that was a Hull victory—which is not quite the same thing as a New Deal victory.) On the other hand, this Congress passed many measures which trimmed down the New Deal. It repealed the undistributed surplus tax; it reorganized WPA and lopped off some of its functions, such as the Federal Theater Project. By an action so unprecedented as to be flagrant, it refused to entertain a "spend-lend" proposal Mr. Roosevelt had sent it.

MAURY MAVERICK

FACED BY THIS condition, the New Deal, since January, 1939, has been fighting a rear-guard battle. Whenever the New Dealers amend a pending measure so as to make it less drastic, that is a New Deal victory. If they prevent a measure from passing, that is a battle won. Rarely or never can they prevent a measure from passing by a straight frontal fight, by registering a majority on a roll-call. Most of their victories are victories of postponement, won by "stalling."

When the new Congress met in January, 1939, it was recognized that one of its most important revisions of the New Deal would be to amend the National Labor Relations Act. There was a majority ready to do it. Steps toward it began at once. But it happened that on the Committees on Labor in both Houses, there was important representation of the New Deal. Consequently, action on the Labor Act was deferred; hearings were postponed again and again. A reason given was that the two wings of labor, A. F. of L. and C. I. O., were in process of attempts to unite, and that action on the Labor Act should await their union. After several months, the delay of the Labor Committee of the House gave rise to an extraordinary action. The House, taking the matter out of the Labor Committee's jurisdiction, set up a special committee to investigate the Labor Board.

As a result of the hearings by this special committee, several amendments to the Labor Act are now before the House. Some of these amendments express the views of those who really want to amend the act; other amendments are put forward as a compromise, in the spirit of what is now the New Deal strategy, to accept something mild, in order to avoid having something drastic forced on them.

It is much the same with the Walter-Logan bill, to require the New Deal alphabetical agencies to submit the orders they issue, the regulations they make, to review by a judicial body. This bill, when introduced in the Senate last year, passed without a dissenting vote. Upon appeal by some New Dealers that they had been taken unawares, the Senate put the measure back on the calendar. Meantime, in the House, the bill, going through the usual routine, came up for action this week.

IT IS GENERALLY felt that, regardless of what the House might do on both the Walter-Logan bill and the Labor Act amendments, the Senate would not act upon them. For this, a reason is that the time is short. But there is a broader reason. The pace of the movement to restrain the New Deal has slowed down somewhat, not because of any resurgence of liking for the New Deal, but because of expediency. Democrats opposed to the New Deal are obliged to take account of the possibility that Mr. Roosevelt may again be the party's candidate for President. They are willing to postpone the surgical operation on the New Deal until after the election.

The Republicans, likewise, are as willing as not to have the measures restraining the New Deal go over until after the election. They feel that the New Deal as it stands, in its original far-reaching forms, is a better asset to the Republicans in the coming election than if it were modified now. They feel, and conservative Democrats also, that the Congress to be elected next November will be even more anti-New Deal than the present one; that the Congress which meets next January will be the body to give a really thorough overhauling to the New Deal.

CHAPTER I

She—There's simply not a dress in this town I can wear!

He—That's all foolishness. The store windows are full of 'em.

She—I've gone to every single store in town.

He—The trouble with you is you make too much fuss about it.

She—But you don't understand——

He—Say, one dress is as good as another.

She—That's perfectly absurd.

He—It's just that women have this fool notion that they must run their legs off going to every store in town before they buy.

She—You think I WANT to run around!

He—Sure! Now if I were doing it I'd march right into the first dependable store I came to and pick out the first decent, respectable dress they brought me.

She—You can't do that—especially with prints.

He—What do you get a print for then?

She—Because everybody else—well, because they—well, because I want one.

He—Well, you can't tell me there's enough difference in dresses to make any woman trot all over town.

She—You'd think differently if you saw me in some I tried on.

He—That's just your imagination. They all look alike to me.

CHAPTER II

She—Well, what do you think of my new dress?

He—What? . . . Oh . . . where on earth did you get that thing?

She—I just bought it—at the first store I came to.

He—You're not going to wear it—that is, out on the street—are you?

She—Why not? A dress is just a dress.

He—That's not the dress for you. Now it might look all right on some cheap flapper——

She—So you think I'm an old woman!

He—Oh, no, no, but—well, I wouldn't think you'd want to wear that thing.

She—What's the matter with it?

He—Oh, I don't know. It's just that it's—it's—oh, for heaven's sake, take it off!

She—All right. I'll take it back. Then I suppose I'll have to run all over town again.

He—No; the thing to do is to buy a dress just as I buy my suits. Now, I just——

She—March into a store and tell them exactly what you want!

He—That's it! The trouble with you women is you never know what you want.

She—The trouble with me is I do know exactly what I want.

He—All right. Just what do you want?

She—I want a print dress that is conservative, distinctive, cool made on simple lines with distinguishing detail, that will go with all my accessories and that I can wear anywhere and feel well dressed.

He—Well, for heaven's sake, why don't you just walk into a store and say so?

She—I have.

He—I don't believe it. You can't tell me there's not a dress like that in town!

She—You think, then, I ought to demand such a dress and bring it home the minute I see it.

He—That's what a man would do.

CHAPTER III

She—Well, how do you like it?

He—Say, that's pretty neat! Now, that's the kind of dress you ought to have gotten in the first place.

She—You're really pleased with it?

He—Yes, indeed! And if I do say it myself, I'm a judge of clothes—on a woman.

She—You think, then, I ought to keep it?

He—Certainly. It's really got class. I guess you'll have to admit now that I do know something about clothes.

She—Yes, only——

He—As a matter of fact, the average man could go out and buy his wife's clothes in one-tenth the time she spends on them, and she'd look 100 per cent better dressed. It's just that women like to make a fuss over everything they do.

She—I think you're right. I'm going to keep this dress. And, by the way, here's the bill.

He—The what? . . . Oh, the bill? Say . . . why . . . why . . .

She—HELP! HELP! HE'S FAINTED!

Black Frocks With Lingerie Accents

These two indispensible little black frocks are sketched from Jane Derby's collection. They are the sort of plain, lady-like young dresses that this American Designer does so well. Gentle and touchingly young, rather like a well-bred English girl's favorite frock, the black linen at left has a simple round neckline and fabric-buttoned basque, the better to display the hand-done cuff and hem ruffles of Broderie Angla is run through with yellow ribbons. At right is another black linen with a big square-cut collar of pleated organdy, lace and ribbon bows

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Greenwich Village Found as 'Bohemian' As Prayer Meeting

New York, April 17.

THE TRITEST words are the truest, which is how they become trite in the first place, and certainly there are few things in human experience more pathetic than trying to recapture old pleasures and excitements in scenes that once thrilled us when we were bluffing our way through school. Old Jim Huneker wrote a great essay on that, called "The Pathos of Distance."

ALICE HUGHES

So there we went, to mingle with the mad artists. We even dared have high hopes of some fun and a few laughs. But, alas, how could it be? It was about as "Bohemian" as a Wednesday night prayer meeting. There was dancing, and a few little girls wandered around in a few ounces of fish-net and a ton of self-consciousness, and the long bar was busy, but as a mad artistic route it was a superb flopperoo. And we were 20 years older than when the Village was still the Village. Back to the fireside, boys and girls of yesterday.

Uptown we can at least get a glimpse of an occasional beauty, like Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt or Mrs. Harrison Williams. Downtown you can't see anything through the darkness and smoke fog.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: We all love the Gypsies, don't we—those romantic, rambling folks whose home is the open road! We know all about them from Hungarian tunes in alleged Viennese operettas. But our town's coppers don't like them. They are sometimes problem children in the city. Two detectives visited four of them to have their palms read and to make a pinch for fortune telling. Whereupon the four Romanies, including two dark ladies, set upon them, and the two constables were badly bitten in the melee—one, alas, on the nose. So it was off to the clink for these fascinating people, and the open road led only to the jail-house.

to make up his own foreign policy as he goes along, is now in the cashew nut business. She owns a huge macadamia nut plantation in Hawaii, and as this tidbit is now raging with popularity, it looks as though the Duchess will keep body and soul together for a while.

Gwen Bristow, the novelist who also lectures on Louisiana life now and again, told me some of the costume problems of a lady lecturer. Since they usually speak from a platform, the current skirt length, or 16 inches up, makes them look comically foreshortened from the front. So Gwen wears a skirt two inches longer than the present fashion. Then, too, a lecturess must never wear a brimmed hat that darkens her face, so Miss Bristow always wears a turban. Platform women with bad legs are viciously victimized by the short skirt. I always think of Sister Aimee McPherson in this connection. Her ankles have always been too thick. But Sister was smart on her preaching tours. She always lined the brink of her stage with potted flowers, so that she was only visible above the knees. Great showman, the Sister.

Hosiery Tonic Retards Runs, Adds Elasticity

Always there have been tonics for the hair, complexion and every known form of illness. Medicinally and psychologically, the worth of these could never be ascertained. Now there's an entirely new type of spring tonic with results that can be estimated in dollars and cents. This is a tonic for hosiery, concocted to preserve the life and beauty of stockings—via the nightly laundering. Now on sale in the local stores, it comes in white flakes.

After washing the hose you dissolve the white powder in water for the final rinsing. This tonic coats each tiny thread with a transparent film of insulation, which promotes snag and run resistance, yet preserves elasticity and strength. In addition to reducing the tendency to run, this substance renders stockings splash-repellent and virtually spot-proof, since its action is on the water-proofing side.

Laboratory tests (you can see the records if you wish) prove that hose treated with this tonic result in 18 times more stretch-endurability than others, as well as the most possible snag-resistance.

According to statistics, about as much is spent on hose unkeep as on all other wearing apparel. The United States Department of Labor confirms this with a statement that women do spend approximately as much on their stockings as they do on dresses. But with the introduction of the new hose tonic to preserve stockings, next year's figures may do a loop-the-loop and add up in favor of the dresses.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Half Heartedly Accepts Man's Fraternity Pin; Now He Finds Himself in Love With Somebody Else; How to Tell Her the Truth Without Hurting Her?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a college senior. About a year and a half ago, I met a girl and fell deeply in love with her. She is a wonderful girl; completely representing what I had always wanted in a woman. I had thought, until recently, that eventually I would ask her to marry me. She has never (so she says) been kissed by any young man except me; and that only twice. She doesn't "pet" at all, as both of us believe such behavior is not quite the thing.

She would never say that she loved me; but only that she "likes me better than any other person her own age." However, she has stated her objection to the life profession I am bent on following (the nature of which it is not necessary to mention here); as she thinks it keeps husband and wife too much apart; and she has never given me much encouragement in my courtship of her. On the other hand, she accepted my fraternity pin last summer (taking it as a "token of friendship"), and she wears it only when with me.

During the past winter, I met another girl (I will call her Ann), who is the young sister-in-law of one of my professors. She was visiting here and it was arranged for me to take her to one of the school dances. I found her extremely attractive. It gave me a sense of great contentment to be with her. But I determined not to fall in love with her; as the other girl (whom I will call Sue) was still very important to me.

I wrote to Ann after she returned home, asking her to come back again later, which she did. And again I found her the most enjoyable companion I had ever known. We did not "pet" at all, incidentally. (And she says that she has been kissed only twice in her life by boys. I believe her, as she is the straightforward type, and both of us agree that truth in every circumstance is better than falsehood, even though it may sometimes hurt.)

Now, after several months' acquaintance, I am sincerely in love with Ann, and she loves me. I really tried not to be; I tried to find things wrong with her; things I could criticize, but strangely enough, I cannot discover a single flaw . . . Things reached a climax a couple of weeks ago, when Ann came here for the week-end to be my guest at a special party. Sue knew she was coming and seemed really pleased at the prospect of meeting her, as both girls had heard of each other, through me. Sue was to be at the party with another fellow, an old friend of hers.

Well, the girls met, and they seemed to like each other. But after the party, when I left Ann at the place she was staying, she asked me to kiss her goodnight. (It had been understood between us how I felt, which meant that while I loved her deeply, I would never kiss her against her will.) And after my second date with Ann I dropped all idea of "making love" to Sue. Well, to get on—I kissed Ann; pretty gently, I guess, since I am not one of the boys who "goes out for experience" along that line. And in the instant of kissing her, I realized that I never could love Sue as I loved her. So, you see, the choice has been made, in my mind.

My problem is this: How to tell Sue the truth, without hurting her unnecessarily? Both girls trust me completely, I believe; and both are confident that their present relationship with me will continue unchanged. But in all fairness to Sue and to myself, I think she should know that my feeling for Ann is the real thing. I think we should return the gifts and pictures we have exchanged, and also the letters, supposing she has kept mine. I know that such a suggestion is going to hurt her—as she has often said the things I have given her are her "most precious possessions."

And I want your opinion on another point: Which girl, do you think, has the most genuine affection for me? And, since I am deeply devoted, in different ways, to both, which do you think I care for most? My one desire is to be happy, and I want the woman I marry to be happy, too. But I don't want personal happiness at the price of another's grief. And I am afraid somebody is going to be hurt here, no matter what I do. How can I clear up the situation, in the most acceptable way? Sincerely yours,

R. C. V.

Straightforward Recital Gives Least Offense

DEAR R. C. V.: When you met Sue, you were in the mood to fall in love. And so, because she is a "wonderful girl," embodying every quality which you admire in womankind, you insisted on giving her your heart. But when you met Ann, reciprocal love developed spontaneously. That "sense of great contentment" her companionship affords is the very touchstone of true love; the kind of love which Elizabeth Barrett Browning has so beautifully described in one of her "Sonnets in the Portuguese"—that sonnet which begins, "How do I love thee? Let me count the ways . . ."

No such affinity of feeling exists between Sue and yourself. It probably never could be evoked; no matter how persistently you might have wooed her (supposing Ann had never appeared on the scene); nor how enthusiastically she might have encouraged your suit. In my opinion, Ann is the girl for you; and Sue never was in the cards, as your wife-to-be. No doubt she admires you almost as much as you admire her; and was therefore touched and flattered by your earnest attentions. But her sincere inability to say she "loved" you, plus her equally sincere objection to your chosen career, clearly indicate that her destiny lies apart from you—whether or not she is prepared to concede the fact wholeheartedly.

The fair—and least hurtful—thing to do is to go straight to Sue with a frank clarification of your feeling for her versus your feeling for Ann. Don't write her about it. Talk to her face to face. Tell her that, in a way, you made a mistake; and, in another way, you didn't; but that experience teaches a fellow a lot he never knew before. Say that you are as fond of her, as deeply devoted to her, as ever. But that your feeling for Ann is entirely different and something you cannot explain, except to say that it is, beyond question, "the real thing"—the kind of feeling, you now realize, which men and women should have when they marry.

You might say that while all this no doubt comes as a sort of surprise to her, just as it has been a surprise to you—you don't expect it will be much of a blow, as she has always truthfully refrained from saying that she (Sue) loved you; and has always been honest in stating her objections to your career-plans. Tell her that her honesty probably has been a lifesaver for both; and that you wish for her the 200 per cent happiness that she deserves, and that she is sure to find with the right guy, whose life work keeps him closer home than yours ever would.

When you go to keep your appointment with her, you might take along her letters, gifts, etc., done in a neat package, and hand them over to her after your major explanations are concluded. Say that under the circumstances, you feel it wouldn't be right for you to keep them any longer; and you reckon she will feel the same about any little souvenirs of you she may have laying around loose. Tell her if she wants to get rid of them, she can send them to you at such-and-such an address, or chuck them at you now, and you will dispose of them in a nice little bonfire, or words to that effect. In brief, don't demand a return of the sentimental trinkets, but make it plain, by indirection, that you would like to withdraw them from the record. The best way to do that is to set her the example outlined above.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Southern and Tropical Foods Make Food Gem

'WAY DOWN SOUTH they like hominy grits. Add pineapple gems to hominy grits and you have a new way with these nutritious bits. The combination of these foods so different in flavor and texture make a cute trick for the table and the serving of such a dish is sure to start conversation. Here is the way to make this winner.

Sauteed Gems and Hominy Slices

Pour 1 cup hominy grits slowly into 3½ cups boiling water to which 1½ teaspoons salt has been added. Boil 5 minutes. Then cover and cook over boiling water for 1 hour. Fry ¼ cup finely chopped salt pork until crisp. Stir crisp salt pork, pork fat and 1 egg into the hominy grits, pour into a loaf mold and chill. Cook 6 to 8 slices bacon until crisp, remove to serving platter and keep warm. Slice hominy, dip in flour and saute in hot bacon fat until a golden brown. While hominy is browning, dip drained, dried pineapple gems in flour and saute in butter. Arrange sauted hominy slices, bacon and sauted pineapple gems on a hot platter and garnish with water cress. Top each hominy slice wtih a spoonful of tart, bright jelly. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Your Figure, Madame!

Watch Figure After 3-Pound Gain, Women Are Advised

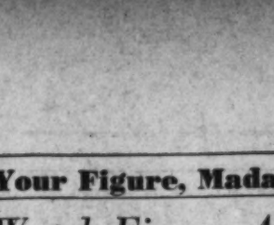
Outdoor Exercise One Means of Halting Weight Increase; New York Model Eliminates Desserts and Fluids at Meals

By Ida Jean Kain

BEAUTIFUL women escape weight troubles for the simple reason that they limit their gains to two or three pounds. As soon as the limit is reached, they act promptly to bring their weight back to the mark considered perfect.

You might think a three-pound gain is not worth noticing . . . but it should be a warning. An uptrend of the scales means you are either eating unwisely or exercising too little, and once those habits get a strong hold on you, you are headed for real weight trouble.

At that point, usually all that is necessary to make the scales behave is to give up between-meal tidbits and desserts. One of New York's loveliest models never touches desserts of any kind because, as she says, "That's the calorie that always puts the pound on me!"



Beautiful figures aren't achieved without exercise

Two Square Meals a Day

If stronger measures are needed for dealing with the three pounds, however, you might like to adopt this plan for a week: Have a hearty breakfast and lunch—and skip dinner!

Besides watching the scales and food intake, the famous beauties all seem to be sold on outdoor exercise. The average woman doesn't get nearly enough! The only time she spends outside is when she is hurrying to do the marketing or shopping. When she has an hour free, she spends it sitting down somewhere—usually indoors.

At this season of the year, you will find mild outdoor activity refreshing and relaxing. Dig your golf clubs out of the hall closet and start playing golf again. If you can't arrange a twosome, try gardening—it is marvelous for frazzled nerves and a wandering waistline! A little mild exercise of that type will make you feel so good you will want to engage in more outdoor activity!

The person who watches the scales finds they never climb very high.

But perhaps that doesn't apply to you . . . you may be a housewife or business woman who has had so many pressing problems of living to solve that you haven't given a thought to your weight in years. So, what if you are 30 pounds overweight? Well, don't be discouraged. Be glad it isn't 75 pounds! But if it were, you could get your figure back. It would not be easy, but in a few months you could overcome years of damage. With your doctor's permission, you can lose 30 or more pounds in one year. And once you get your weight down where it belongs, you won't need any urging to keep it there!

Survey Job Discrimination, Mead Advises A. A. U. W.

New Yorker Discusses Effect That Age Has On Employment, Contends Elderly Workers Are Generally More Dependable, Efficient

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

Leap Year was suggested last night by Senator James A. Mead, of New York, as a practical solution for the unemployment problem of the middle-aged woman.

Speaking in a more serious vein as he addressed a dinner of the Washington branch of the American Asociation of University Women, arranged last night by the committee on the economic and legal status of women, he advised a survey of causes of discrimination on the basis of age. Among other suggestions was that of elimination of age discrimination and requirements in most branches of the Government and an adjustment of State and Federal insurance and retirement plans.

Senator Mead cited findings made following surveys in both business and industry, showing the worker of middle age was more dependable and efficient, and maintained better health than one younger. The middle-aged worker also proved quicker in adapting himself to new work. Despite this, said Senator Mead, the person past 40 seeking employment finds himself arbitrarily barred in many instances.

Admitting to being past 50 himself, the speaker quoted the statement that "40 is the old age of youth but 50 is the youth of old age."

Senator Mead commended the university women for their effort at a "combined intellectual attack" on the problem. He asserted such approch was destined to raise the level of political campaigns—"candidates will be obliged to abandon their evasions." He expressed the hope that the Nation in the next few months would become "one great forum" where problems were freely and intelligently discussed.

He predicted that "the storms of the 40's" would be worse than the "storms of the early 30's" but that we as a people could weather them if we clung to democracy and were "determined to dig in and stay right here and, at peace, seek the solution for our problems."

Miss Mary V. Robinson, chairman of the committee, presided at the dinner after Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, the club president, had opened the meeting.

A brief dramatization of interviews the committee has recently given older women in need of employment, was presented by Mrs. Lawrence Kuter, of the Washington Civic Theater. It was entitled "Four Women in Search of a Job."

Other speakers, in addition to Senator Mead, were Mrs. Helen Essary, Washington columnist, who talked on "Problems of the Older Woman with a Job;" Dr. Elmer L. Keuser, of George Washington University, and Dr. William Downs, president of the Americans Over 40 Club of Washington.

Among the honor guests were Senora Alfonso, director of child welfare in Puerto Rico; Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., Dean Van Vleck, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Judge Lucy Somerville Howorth, B. and P. W. Club president; Miss Edith M. Beattie, president of the Graduate Nurses Association; Miss Mary Bourke, president of the Soroptimist Club; Robert L. Bondy, director of the D. C. Public Welfare Department; Miss Marie Gurley, D. C. Employment Center; Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, president of the Altrusa Club; Mrs. Miller Hickerson, of the Goodwill Industries; Miss Mary Sigman, Zonta Club president; Mrs. Peter A. Speek, secretary to the committee on the economic and legal status of women, of the A. A. U. W.; Miss M. Katherine Tancill, president of the Quota Club; Miss Gladys Jones, secretary of Quota International, and also a member of the committee.

Women's News Is Held Vital To Newspaper

Donald J. Sterling Addresses Writers At Luncheon Meeting

Women's features have an established place in any paper and they are news, Donald J. Sterling, of the Oregon Journal and president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, told members of the Women's National Press Club yesterday.

Speaking before the club's weekly luncheon meeting at the Willard Hotel, he rated news on food, fashions and house furnishings of more importance to the average American woman than that, for instance of the appointment of a new Japanese premier.

The five-day week, allowing more time for recreation, has resulted in heavier emphasis on sports news, he said. Comics take the lead over all other features in popularity, with serials at the head of the list.

He mentioned the trend toward the picture story as the papers feel competition from picture magazines and newsreels. The radio is an ally rather than a competitor of the newspaper, he believes.

This statement was borne out by Walter P. Jones, of the McClatchy Newspapers in California, who said his organization owned three newspapers and five radio stations.

Mr. Sterling, following his introduction by Ruby Black, president of the club, mentioned the fact that one of its members, Miss Vella A. Winner, director of press relations for the General Federation of Women's Clubs and editor of The Club Woman GFWC, had been on the journal staff for some years before coming to Washington.

Another honor guest yesterday was Oveta Culp Hobby, editor of the Houston Post, of which her husband, William Hobby, is president and publisher. A petite, attractive person with merry eyes and a ready smile, she had more the appearance of a young reporter than of an editor.

Newspaper men among the guests were Brian Bell, of the Associated Press; John Sparks, of the Grand Rapids Herald; Gradstone Williams, local representative of the McClatchy papers, and Richard Grennell, of News Week.

The District Congress of Parents and Teachers will sponsor the "children's crusade for children" in Washington.

Since a regulation prohibits the collection of money in the public schools, Mrs. C. D. Lowe, the president, in a letter sent to the individual units, has suggested four ways in which they may raise funds to be presented in the name of the children of the Capital.

The first is for associations having meetings during the coming week, which has been designated Children's Crusade Week, to take a free-will offering, to be given in the name of the children of the school.

The second is that those having ways and means projects give a percentage of the profits; the third, a suggestion for elementary school entertainments for the children after school hours, charging a small fee and the fourth, a contribution from the treasury of local associations. All contributions are sent to the headquarters of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers and from there to the crusade headquarters in New York City.

In connection with the contributions, an educational campaign is being carried on, to enlighten the children of this country as to the suffering of those in other lands, resulting from war.

A broadcast will be presented at 5:45 Saturday over station WJSV, with Mrs. Lowe, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle and Mrs. Sidney Smith of the Board of Education as the speakers.

Stork Winging Its Way To Home of the Lodges

Arrival Is Expected in September; Thurman Arnold Finishing Another Book; Procope's Call Upsets Beauty Shop Routine

By Hope Ridings Miller

NO PLACE LIKE a ladies' luncheon . . . at which to find out what's going on, who's back in town, and a few other bits of table talk that can pass as news with no trouble at all.

Now, if all I heard yesterday at a small and pleasant party at the Shoreham Hotel could be laid paragraph to paragraph, it would fill a column a lot longer than this one can be. So, I'll just pass on a few items—to wit:

Hope Ridings Miller.

The stork is winging its way toward the home of Senator and Mrs. Cabot Lodge, and is due to arrive in September . . .

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, whose book, "The Folklore of Capitalism," was a best-seller a few years ago, is finishing another tome, scheduled for early-summer publication. . . .

The handsome Minister of Finland had operators at a local beauty shop in a dither of delight one day recently when he dropped in to see his bride while she was having her hair done. A few minutes later he came back with a present for her—a jeweled bracelet he had just purchased . . .

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Beall Gwynn, who are now honeymooning at Cat Cay, will take Mrs. Gwynn Turnure's house at 1621 Thirty-fourth street when they return to Washington April 29. Perhaps you've heard already that Mrs. Turnure is to be married again soon—to O. B. Winter, of New York, who owns an estate in Cat Cay . . .

The Bruce Smiths, having closed their house in Coral Gables, Fla., are back in their Mayflower apartment and expect to divide their time between Washington and their Virginia estate from now until the Philadelphia convention. Incidentally, they are also planning to be in Chicago when the Democrats get together . . .

Mrs. James Slattery, wife of the Senator from Illinois, has as guests her aunt, Mrs. William Hartray, and Mrs. John J. Kelly, both of Chicago . . .

YESTERDAY'S LUNCHEON—yes, I'm back to that now—was one of those pleasantly informal parties that nobody wants to leave. The hostess will be nameless, by special request of the copyright owner; but the congenial company included Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Joseph O'Mahoney, Mrs. William J. Smathers, Mrs. James Slattery, and several others.

There was a good deal of Illinois talk across the table, as more than half those present either have lived in that State or still call it home. Both Mrs. Slattery's house guests were in the company; as were Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, who has a home in Lake Forest; and Mrs. Bruce Smith and Mrs. John O. Herrick, who formerly lived in Chicago.

Still another in the pleasant gathering was Mrs. Patrick Hurley, whose ensembles always make fashion news and who was smartly turned out for the luncheon in a trimy navy blue suit with a wide-brimmed matching hat.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Mrs. Ralph Worthington will entertain at luncheon on Sunday in her Virginia home. The party is the second in a series. The one last Sunday was for Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed. . . . Mr. and Mrs. F. Henry Jones have cards out for a tea on Sunday, April 28, from 5 to 7 o'clock . . . Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bolduc Montfort will be hosts at a tea on Sunday, May 5. . . .

SMART WASHINGTONIANS have flocked in droves to the spring festival concerts at the Governor's palace in Williamsburg, Va. . . . Mrs. Arthur Woods entertained at a dinner at Travis House, Williamsburg, last evening and took her guest on to the second concert in the series . . . Among others there for the festival are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Tracy Dows, Mrs. David Wing, Mrs. J. S. Flannery and Dr. Hans Kindler, director of the National Symphony Orchestra.

Honeymooning at Cat Cay

DR. AND MRS. HENRY BEALL GWYNN, whose marriage took place last week, are shown here shortly after they landed from the Bahaman Clipper which took them from Miami to Cat Cay, where they will spend several days. They will return to Washington the end of this month

Lady Leslie Gives Party For Countess

Reception Is Also A Farewell for Her To Apartment Here

By Elizabeth Henney

Very much on the spur of the moment, as is her wont, Lady Leslie yesterday afternoon gathered a group of friends at her apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue for a twofold purpose.

The first was to present them to her guests of honor of the afternoon, the Countess of Gainsborough and her daughter, Lady Maureen Noel. The other reason was a sort of farewell to her apartment and lovely belongings, for the time being at least. At the end of April Lady Leslie will close her apartment, store her furniture and move to a hotel for a few months until she starts off on her summer jaunt south, through Mexico and South America.

Receiving in the drawing room, the hostess was gowned in black satin-striped faille, fashioned with short sleeves and a flaring skirt.

Countess Is Stunning In Polka Dot Frock

The Countess of Gainsborough was stunning in a dark frock with white polka dot print, over which she wore a silver fox cape. Lady Mauren Noel, also in a dark frock, drew a host of compliments on her smart hat, one of the newest of bonnets, in black and white, tied piquantly with a black ribbon bow under the chin.

Guests gathered in groups around the lace-covered tea table in the dining room, where a wide variety of delicacies tempted them. In addition to the regular teatime dainties, there were sherry and scotch and soda, the latter in great favor with the masculine guests, of whom there were many more than usually show up at afternoon events.

Library, Conservatory Are Popular Places

Equally popular were the library and conservatory, where guests paused to inspect Lady Leslie's exquisite possessions. Amazingly homelike is this apartment for one containing such a remarkable collection of museum pieces, paintings of the old masters, Persian rugs, stained glass windows softly and indirectly lighted, even a section of a carved window from an Arabian harem.

Mrs. Emil Hurja looked exceedingly smart in a navy blue frock, silver fox furs, and a navy pöstillion hat trimmed with a large chou of dusty rose and ribbon of the same tone. Mrs. Henry Jewett, in black and white, was among the early arrivals as were Mrs. Churchill Candee, who topped her dark frock with a small flowered hat of clover shade.

Others noted there between dusk and dark were Mrs. Keith Watson, Lady Chalkley, Rear Admiral Harley H. Christy, Henry Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Murphy, she in black with a picturesque halo hat; Ralph Totten, Grovethann Oertling, Mrs. Prince Meyer, chic in a severely tailored outfit and accompanied by her daughter, who accented her gray suit with a fire-engine red hat and accessories to match.

About the Town with DUDLEY HARMON

Mail, Telegrams Flood Norse Legation, Along With Donations to Help in War

THE STAFF OF THE Norwegian Legation here has already expanded by four workers since last week's invasion, but even they can't keep up with the flood of mail and telegrams from over the country. Money for this latest cause is pouring in, ranging from quarters sent by sympathetic schoolboys to larger donations. But so far, Minister de Morgenstierne has received no presents such as the horse and the diamond necklace donated to Finnish Envoy Procope.

THE NUMBER OF WORKERS at the Legation of Finland, increased to 40 during the war, is now back to its comparatively small figure—25. Some of the clerical help in the military and purchasing end have gone on to other things, but not all. For Finland is still buying arms in this country to fortify the new frontiers.

Several Finnish businessmen in this country volunteered their services to the legation during the war with Russia. Attache Wilhelm Ramsay stayed here just long enough to get listed in the State Department directory of foreign diplomats, but has now returned to his job with a pulp corporation in New York.

Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne came back to Washington yesterday after a visit with her relatives in Canada. The Minister is expected here shortly from New York, where he went on business.

WHAT HAPPENS when a girl really sets out to seek adventure is shown by the example of Miss Irja Lindgren, secretary to Mrs. J. Borden Harriman at the United States Legation in Norway. She worked for a well-known Government official here in Washington until after begging and pleading she finally persuaded him to get her a job in Europe. She is of Finnish descent and was dead set on going abroad.

Until a few weeks ago Miss Lindgren was secretary to Minister Arthur Schoenfeld in Helsinki, so this is her second bombardment this winter. She is young, blonde, and, we hear, a very quiet type!

EVE CURIE attracted almost as much attention as Mrs. Roosevelt at the circus gala Tuesday evening. She had on a mink coat over her long sleeved, high-necked black dress, and wore her sleek black hair rolled up to frame her face.

The audience, incidentally, was super-chic. Which led to the following wisecrack from one of the spectators:

During one of the bareback riding acts in the middle ring, a tall, dignified elder woman with white hair piled in curls, a black paillette evening gown and a glittering tiara, stood in the center and cracked the whip for the performers.

"Looks as though she'd escaped from the audience," whispered our friend. "No doubt a frustrated boxholder."

IT TAKES PRACTICALLY nothing less important than a family reunion to get the hard-working Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, to an afternoon affair. However, he was among the small group who dropped in to the apartment of Miss Ann Dahlman the other afternoon for a drink. With him was Mrs. Ickes, who is a sister of the hostess, and another sister, Mrs. Wilmarth Ickes, was also present. The latter is here from her home in the Middle West for a visit with Miss Dahlman.

Others who chatted with the trio of sisters over a highball included Charles Gaines, who left at dawn yesterday to visit his family in Jacksonville, Fla., the Solicitor of the Labor Department and Mrs. Gerard D. Reilly, Marcia Umbsen, Jake Baker, Gordon Tweedy, Mr. and Mrs. Michael W. Straus, Miss Carol Agar and Abe Fortas.

ALL THE VISITORS to Washington this week are not members of the D. A. R. Here for a fortnight is Mrs. R. A. Long Ellis, the former Mary McDowell, who is staying with her mother, Mrs. Luther Sheldon. Since her marriage several years ago to the son of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Hayne Ellis, she has been living in Kansas City. Mrs. Sheldon will entertain at cocktails for her tomorrow afternoon.

Also in town is Mrs. Ormond Lawson-Johnston, who will be with her daughter, Mrs. Grant Mason, for a week. Mrs. Drew Pearson has with her her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Moore, of Columbus.

Lieut. Taylor, Helen Shepard Wed in Boston

Both Are Children Of Former Officers In the U. S. Army

Of interest to Washington was the wedding in Boston on Tuesday of Miss Helen Gertrude Shepard, daughter of Mrs. Benjamin Curtis Tower, of Brookline, Mass., and the late Capt. Francis Burritt Shepard, U. S. A., to Lieut. James Davis Taylor 3d, U. S. N., of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Franklin H. Ellis, of this city, and the late Col. James Davis Taylor, U. S. A.

The couple were married in the Church of the New Jerusalem, the Rev. Antony P. Regamey officiating. The bride was attended by her half-sister, Miss Betsy Tower, of Brookline, and Mrs. Kenneth H. Perkins and Miss Mary Elizabeth Lowe, of Boston.

Lieut. Comdr. William P. Tammany, of Philadelphia, was best man for Lieut. Taylor. The ushers were Lieut Robert Cameron Morton, of Norfolk, Va.; Lieut. Comdr Leslie K. Pollard, of Belmont, Mass.; Lieut. Theodore C. Fauntz, of Newport, R. I., and Lieut. Mannert L. Abele.

The bride was graduated from the May School in Boston in 1929 and made her debut at a tea dance at the country club in Brookline during the 1929-1930 season. Lieut. Taylor was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1925. He is a member of the Chevy Chase Club.

Mrs. Cyrus C. Cole Has Come East, Is in New England

Mrs. Cyrus C. Cole, wife of Lieut. (jg) Cole who is attached to the United States Ship Stingray, has come East. After visiting her father, W. S. Garland, on Lennox avenue for several weeks, Mrs. Cole left for New England.

At present she is in Portsmouth, N. H., visiting her husband's parents, Admiral and Mrs. Cyrus W. Cole. Admiral Cole is commandant there. The former Miss Marjorie Garland will return to Washington shortly for another visit.

Reino Luoma's Recital Today

The Minister of Finland and Mme. Procope are among those planning to attend the musicale to be given this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Sulgrave Club by the 20-year-old Finnish pianist, Reino Luoma.

Others who have made reservations are Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Countess Szechenyi, Mrs. Amelia L. Heurick, Miss Elizabeth P. Patterson, Mrs. George B. Parker, Mrs. Alice P. Strong, Mrs. Charles Warren, Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, Dr. Hans Kindler and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson.

Mrs. Roosevelt is one of the sponsors for this musical by an artist who is deemed by outstanding musical leaders one of the greatest young pianists of the time. The musicale will be held to raise funds to enable him to donate his talents for Finnish relief concerts throughout the country.

Mr. and Mrs. Little Give a Luncheon

Mr. and Mrs. Elliotte Little entertained a small company at luncheon yesterday in the Louis Seize Room of the Shoreham.

Among their guests were Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Fox Conner, Mrs. John Zeigler, Mr. and Mrs. Wadsworth Moore, Miss Alverta Ellis, Miss Helen Myers and Dr. and Mrs. Lewin Kibler.

Notables to Model Fashions Today To Aid the Sick

No spinach is the fashion which 23 of Capital society's smartest will model today during luncheon in the Shoreham blue room for the benefit of charity cases in district hospitals.

Hats, dresses and furs from New York and chic hair-dos and make-up from Washington will be promenaded down the runway before what, according to advance reservations should be the smartest audience ever to attend a local fashion showing.

Many men are expected to be in the audience, several already having reserved their own stag tables.

Mrs. Millard Tydings will entertain a table of ten Senate ladies and among other Senate wives who are entertaining at the luncheon are Mrs. Josh Lee, Mrs. William J. Bulow, Mrs. Dennis Chavez, and Mrs. John H. Overton, Mrs. A. B. Chandler and Mrs. Claude Pepper are among the models who will exhibit the clothes.

Among others who have taken tables for the luncheon are Mrs. George Pettingill, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. George T. Walker, Mrs. A. F. Busick, Mrs. Bruce Smith, Mrs. Oliver Owen Kuhn, Mrs. Randall Hagner, Mrs. James McM. Gibson, Mrs. Martin Morrow, Mrs. Aldace Walker, Mrs. William W. Sullivan, Mrs. Geneva Dunham, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Mrs. J. Harold DeVeau, Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, Mrs. Arthur Sullivan, Mrs. John Lewis Smith and Mrs. Charles H. March.

Davieses Hosts To Belgian Envoy, Family at Dinner

The Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies entertained at a dinner party last evening, informally when their honor guests were the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz. Also at the dinner party was Miss Betty van der Straten, daughter of the envoy and his wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Davies will entertain at a formal dinner tomorrow night in honor of the newly-arrived Charge d'Affaires of the Duchy of Luxembourg and Mme. Le Gallais. While Mr. Davies was Ambassador to Belgium he also served as this country's representative to Luxembourg.

Last night's dinner party was given in the Schoellkopf home at 2700 Macomb street, which the Davies leased last fall. On May 1 they expect to enter the Ryan estate on Foxhall road which they have taken for the coming season.

Bartons Hosts To the Procopes And Robertses

The Finnish Minister and Mme. Procope and Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts were the ranking guests at a dinner given last evening by Representative and Mrs. Bruce Barton, of New York. The party took place at the 1925 F Street Club.

Also in the group was Kenneth Simpson, chairman of the New York Republican National Committee, who is visiting Washington. Mrs. Simpson is with him, and was also at the dinner. Representative and Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts, who were among the guests, brought with them Col. Thomas Murphy, of Boston.

Mrs. Thomas Griffith Is Hostess at Party

Mrs. Thomas Griffith was hostess at a luncheon and bridge party yesterday at Normandy Farm.

Poor Little Fishes To Have Their Day At Dinner Tonight

A mule dressed as a fish, and towing three toy fish behind him, will be one of the amusing features of the "Poison d'Avril" dinner and dance at Normandy Farm tonight. The celebration is patterned on the famous fete held during April in France, where it is the custom, instead of "April fooling" people, to celebrate the "festival of the fish" by continual parties.

Germaine, well-known French radio singer, will render the song "Three Little Fishes," and Miss Marjorie Hendricks has installed in the dining room a miniature pond, to be filled with marine game. Poles for catching the prey will be distributed, and a prize awarded to the person who lands the largest. A gift will also go to the one who tells the biggest "fish story."

Miss Hendricks will entertain a party at the dinner. Her guests will include her sister, Miss Genevieve Hendricks, Mrs. Alexander Dye, Mrs. Helen Ray Hagner, Lyle Brookover, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ashbrook, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. Reginald Conrad, Mrs. William Robert Powers and Mr. and Mrs. Ross Johnson.

Bulkley Assails U.S. Conduct Of Trust Suit

Justice Department Accused of 'Improper And Unlawful' Action

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

A former New Deal Senator whom President Roosevelt supported for reelection in 1938 yesterday accused the Justice Department of "improper and unlawful" conduct in handling an antitrust suit against the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation.

The charge was made by former Senator Bulkley, of Ohio, in testimony before a Senate Judiciary subcommitte. Bulkley, defeated by Senator Taft in the 1938 elections, appeared as a representative of the Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co., long an opponent of Columbia Gas & Electric, with regard to the control of the Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co.

The Department started an antitrust proceeding in 1935 to force Columbia Gas to divest itself of control over Panhandle Eastern. It entered into a consent decree in January, 1936, whereby stock held by the Columbia system in Panhandle Eastern was placed in the hands of a trustee.

This arrangement, Bulkley asserted, turned out to be "so bad" that the Department reopened the case. It now proposes, he said, to enter into a new consent decree which still would not force Columbia Gas to release its hold on Panhandle Eastern.

Investigation "Welcomed"

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, in charge of anti-trust matters, "welcomed," however, a full committee investigation of the Department's handling of the case. He clashed with Bulkley at the committee hearing. The former Senator said the Department's conduct was 'reprehensible." Arnold shot back that Bulkley's remarks were "reprehensible" and "reckless."

Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line is the principal minority stockholder in Panhandle Eastern, which, witnesses testified, built some years ago a pipe line from the Texas Panhandle to Dana, Ind., and has not been permitted to expand further under Columbia Gas domination.

The subcommittee hearing was on a resolution by Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, to investigate complaints of monopolistic practices in the natural gas industry.

John W. Smith, president of the Detroit Common Council, quoted Arnold and Milton Katz, a former Justice Department attorney, as saying the department had agreed to the new consent decree because it was faced with "a bad court" in Delaware.

Hearing Set for Tuesday

Judge John P. Nields, of the U. S. District Court for Delaware, will hold a hearing next Tuesday on a report by a master recommending approval of the plan.

Under the arrangement, he said, directors of the Columbia Oil & Gasoline Co., which owns a majority of the voting stock of Panhandle Eastern, would resign, and the Attorney General would have a "veto power" over the appointment of new directors for a five-year period.

The object of the plan, department officials said, is to "drive a wedge" between Columbia Oil & Gasoline and Columbia Gas & Electric, which controls the former.

The plan, however, Bulkley contended, "favors" Columbia Gas, and is without precedent.

He asked the committee to unravel the "mystery" whereby the department allowed Columbia Gas special treatment.

Labor Leaders Fight Patman Chain Tax Bill

Destruction of Jobs Feared If Measure Handicaps Systems

By the Associated Press

Representatives of labor and the trucking industry joined executives of chain stores yesterday in opposing the Patman bill to tax interstate chain stores.

C. M. Baker, president of the International Typographical Union, told a House subcommittee the measure in effect would levy a tax on initiative and efficiency, and place a premium on mediocrity

"You do not need to tax to destroy," he said. "Whenever one of the concerns affected by this bill ceases to serve the public and to continuously 'tell' the public what it has to offer and where it is offered and at what prices, it will pass from the picture."

Fears Newspaper Closings

Baker said that 51 daily newspapers had suspended publication last year, and that the Patman bill, forcing chain stores to close because of prohibitive taxation, probably would accelerate such newspaper suspensions by removing an important source of advertising revenue.

J. J. Hommer, general superintendent of the Lapin Products Co.'s Newark, N. J., plant, appeared as a delegate from the plant's employes to urge defeat of the measure.

The Lapin Co. manufactures a diversity of products for variety stores. Homer said large scale, economical year-round production was possible only because of the tremendous outlet through chain stores, which absorbed about 80 per cent of the company's output.

Prices Aid Independents

The independent concerns, he said, were able to get the remaining 20 per cent at attractive prices only because of the sustained large-scale production made possible by the chain organizations.

Allen J. Wilson, of Boston, representing the American Trucking Association, said thousands of jobs in the trucking industry were endangered by the threat to chain stores contained in the Patman bill, which "would add such a burden to the chain stores as might result in their elimination."

A. T. & T. Created Work During Depression To Keep Employes, Monopoly Committee Told

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. during the depression deliberately retarded the pace of technological advance in order to keep thousands of employes at work, the Monopoly Committee heard yesterday.

W. H. Harrison, vice president of the Bell System, testified that his corporation "at the bottom of the depression" retained 60,000 unneeded employes by providing "made work," reducing the work week and checking the installation of dial telephones.

No significant technological developments have occurred in the telephone industry in the last eight years, the executive said, and none as far-reaching as the dial system is in sight.

A sharply contrasting picture of A. T. & T. policy was presented to the committee by Miss Rose Sullivan, of the Commercial Telegraphers Union, a general organizer for the American Federation of Labor.

Accused of Pressing Installation

Miss Sullivan charged that the Bell System has pressed installation of dial phones because a reduction in personnel would "make it easier to deal with the problems of wages, hours and working conditions."

The corporation was alarmed by "the competent, militant unionization of telephone personnel in New England," she asserted.

Miss Sullivan insisted that the Nation's present telephone load could be efficiently handled on manual switchboards, while the dial system "transfers labor from the operator, who gets wages, to the subscriber, who doesn't."

Dial phones do not make the service cheaper for the subscriber, she said, and fail to supply the "animate and intelligent" service essential in a personal or community emergency.

She testified that the "cut-over" from the manual to dial system throws 80 out of 100 employes out of work in a typical telephone station.

Jobs Eliminated

Harrison conceded that use of the dial telephone has eliminated numerous jobs in the telephone industry but told the committee that "broadly speaking, employes affected by improvements in apparatus or operating methods have not been laid off, but have been retrained and reassigned."

"If and when we reach the time that all switchboards are on the dial system, our service will have expanded so much that the total number of employes will not decrease," he said.

Senator Joseph G. O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, committee chairman, said the corporation's plant investment, annual revenue, number of telephones in service and number of conversations handled are higher today than ever before, while the number of employes has fallen from a peak of 364,000 in 1929 to approximately 260,000 today.

Dr. T. J. Kreps, economic adviser to the committee, asserted that "in this industry the benefits of technology were not passed on to the consumer." Chief gainers by introduction of the dial phoning system were A. T. & T. stockholders, he said.

New Deal Bloc Pushes Battle On Walter Bill

Conservatives Back Measure; Passage Probable Today

By International News Service

Big guns of the Roosevelt Administration launched an uphill battle in the House yesterday to defeat the Logan-Walter bill, which would permit court review of rules and regulations issued by more than 100 Federal bureaus.

With a vote on the measure expected to be reached today, and polls foreshadowing the measure would be passed, Democratic Leader Rayburn, of Texas, undecided for weeks, declared his opposition to the bill.

Two amendments to exempt the Civil Service Commission and to make certain that the status of Federal employes will not be affected by the bill will be offered today by Chairman Ramspeck, of the Civil Service Committee.

Ramspeck declared yesterday that "the bill will probably pass because to vote for it is the easy political thing to do, and everybody believes the President will veto it."

Representative Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, swung into the fight with claims the measure is "the most revolutionary that could be conceived." He called it a departure from the American form of government.

But supporters of the measure had their innings. "The quickest way to get rid of progressive legislation, in which I believe, is to perpetuate the present autocratic system of administering it," exclaimed Representative Walter (Democrat), Pennsylvania, coauthor of the bill.

"The best way to preserve progressive legislation is to provide the citizen with his day in court, as provided in this bill," Walter added.

Adopted on motion of Representative Voorhis (Democrat), of California, was an amendment to bar court review of administrative orders in effect for more than three years. Rejected was an amendment by Representative Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, to permit his State to obtain court review of its claims for $1,336,000 in Social Security funds.

Based on claims Government bureaus, boards and commissions have been issuing rules and regulations at variance with the law, the Logan-Walter bill would permit dissatisfied citizens to appeal from alleged illegal rulings to the courts. The National Labor Relations Board and Securities and Exchange Commission would be among the agencies affected.

The labor board's findings under present law must be accepted in court if there is "some evidence" to sustain them, whereas under the bill the rule of "substantial evidence" would be invoked.

Pilots Oppose Abolition of Air Safety Board

CAA's Subordination To Commerce Dept. Also Faces Fight

By Ansel E. Talbert
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Pilots flying the skyways of the United States which on March 28 completed the first year of perfect safety in aviation history yesterday began a campaign to rally Congressional opposition against the proposal of President Roosevelt to subordinate the Civil Aeronautics Authority to the Department of Commerce and abolish the Air Safety Board.

Telegrams protesting the proposed changes were sent to every member of the Senate and House over the signature of David Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots' Association. These asserted that the pilots "to a man" pled for the defeat of the President's reorganization plan and added that not only pilots but everyone in the aviation industry looked back "with abhorrence" to the days when the Department of Commerce had control of civil flying in America.

"Crash upon crash, needless sacrifice of human life occurred during this dark period," the telegrams recalled. "The pilots lost 146 of their number by reason of crash-deaths during the 12-year period and a startling total of 473 persons lost their lives in air crashes."

Tuesday's formation of a nonpartisan battle line of aviation enthusiasts in the Senate to oppose the C. A. A. reorganization, which occurred when Senator Warren R. Austin (Republican), of Vermont, announced that he would fight shoulder to shoulder with his Democratic colleague, Senator Pat McCarran of Nevada, against the changes, was duplicated yesterday in the House. There Representative John M. Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, who was a pilot in the Naval Air Service in the World War and Ohio's first director of aeronautics, followed Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, in stating publicly that he was against the reorganization plan.

Recalling that he had been flying since 1916 and was a member of the Quiet Birdmen (the organization to which most of the Nation's experienced pilots belong), Representative Vorys sent a personal letter to Behncke revealing his willingness to "do everything I can" to defeat the President's proposal.

Dr. Dunn Advocates 5-Year Interim Census

Hartford, Conn., April 17 (AP).—Halbert L. Dunn, chief statistician for vital statistics in the Federal Bureau of the Census in Washington, forecast today eventual introduction of a five-year "interim" plan that would provide quick fractional information concerning the Nation's population.

"Something must be set up in between the regular 10-year census periods," Dr. Dunn told newsmen in an interview before addressing the tenth annual New England Health Institute.

Such a service would be of particular value to industry and business, he said.

Wall Street Gets Silver Lining With War Touch

New York, April 17 (AP).—A display of armed might on its own doorstep diverted Wall Street's attention for a while today from war news and speculation in armament stocks.

United States Coast Guardsmen carrying machine guns and police squads threw a protecting ring around a disabled truck-trailer heavily loaded with silver bound from the Government's downtown assay office to Treasury vaults in the hills behind West Point Military Academy.

The silver convoy broke down on Wall Street in front of the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., and across from the Stock Exchange, at the country's best known money hub. A repair crew, after an hour's work, got the treasure started on its journey again.

WPA Shakedown Probe Is Asked In Tennessee

Knoxville, Tenn., April 17 (AP).—Persistent reports of a "political shakedown" among Knox County WPA workers were laid today before a Federal agency for investigation.

United States District Attorney Frazier asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to conduct an "immediate" inquiry so that the findings "might be available to the next grand jury" which meets in May.

Last Sunday two former WPA workers gave the Knoxville Journal affidavits that they were forced to contribute $1 each to a "campaign fund" under threat of losing their jobs.

Citizens Back Food Stamp Plan for D. C.

Anderson Bill Gets Southwest Group Approval As Suffrage Step

The food-stamp plan, backed by the Department of Agriculture and operated in many large cities, last night was indorsed by the Southwest Citizens Association as a means of lowering food costs for Washington's needy families.

First tried in Rochester, N. Y., the plan offers relief families 50 cents worth of surplus food stamps free for every dollar purchase of standard price food stamps. Many surplus commodities have thus been disposed of with benefit to the needy.

The group also indorsed the Anderson bill providing for the election of District Commissioners. Harry S. Wender, president, temporarily left the chair to propose the indorsement by commenting that it was "at least a step in the direction of Washington suffrage."

Other indorsements passed were that Abbott Vocational School be moved to the Brentwood site; that items covering the custodial staff be restored for the new Jefferson Junior High School, and that an item providing salaries for two vocational guidance directors be restored. These proposals were made by the Rev. Harry V. Porter.

Mrs. Bessie Parish, secretary, read acknowledgments from the White House and Justice Department over the group's recent indorsement of Harry S. Wender for the vacant Police Court judgeship.

Reporting on the section's youth unemployment situation, William Brody declared that the welfare committee had persuaded the bricklayers' local to accept additional apprentices from the southwest area.

North Randle Highlands

Residents of the growing community at North Randle Highlands continued their fight for an adequate grade school at the monthly meeting of their Citizens' Association in the portable school, Minnesota avenue and E streets southeast, last night.

The association voted to ask the Board of Education for school appropriation at its next meeting, April 29. At present, according to an estimate by Archie D. Edwards, president, more than 30 children of kindergarten age either have to be taken more than one mile to a school by their parents or must forego kindergarten instruction. Cost of a new grade school for the area has been estimated at $250,000.

Plans for entertainment and dancing at the May meeting, final session of this season, were also discussed.

16th Street Highlands

A plea that facilities for teaching shut-in children in the District be continued was voiced by members of the Sixteenth Street Highlands Citizens Association last night in the Brightwood School.

A resolution that the WPA continue a visiting teachers project for this purpose was adopted.

The group also voted to support a 1943 world's fair for Washington, celebrating the 150th anniversary of the laying of the Capitol's cornerstone. William V. Mahoney introduced the resolution.

Another resolution approved the recent appointment of J. Russell Young as District Commissioner.

A letter from William A. Van Duzer, District traffic director, assured the association that steps were being taken to remove the traffic hazard at Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue northwest. A parking ban on one side of Colorado avenue at the intersection will give motorists a clear view of buses leaving the terminal there, it was pointed out.

The association elected R. G. Merryman treasurer to fill a vacancy left by the late James Maupin, whose death occurred April 1.

Chevy Chase Association

The proposal, now before Congress, that horse racing be legalized in the District was opposed by an overwhelming majority at the April meeting of the Chevy Chase Citizens' Association last night in the E. V. Brown School.

The vote on a resolution condemning the racetrack plan did not come, however, until after acrimonious debate.

The association also took action to meet growing complaints of destruction in the community caused by youthful vandals. It was voted that parents should instill in their children respect for private property.

A bill to establish a Potomac Valley Conservancy Authority to stop pollution of the Potomac River and Rock Creek was unanimously approved.

The plight of the Chevy Chase motorist who became confused between commercial neon signs and police traffic lights drew sympathy but no action.

Forest Hills

The Forest Hills Citizens' Association held its annual dinner last night at the Columbia Country Club with Wilbur A. LaRoe, jr., as toastmaster, presiding.

Mrs. Leslie B. Wright, president, addressed the group.

Serving on the dinner committee were Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick, Mrs. Charles D. Hamel, Mrs. L. O. Colbert, Mrs. Ernest H. Daniel, Mrs. J. Ward Eicher, Mrs. Victor V. Kelsey, Mrs. Wilbur LaRoe, jr., Mrs. Blake Palm, Mrs. Paul Segal, Mrs. E. L. Springer, Mrs. H. A. Swaggert and Mrs. Prentiss Willson.

More than 100 attended.

Child Hurt by Bicycle

Robert O'Connell, 4, of 204 Q street northwest, suffered a fractured right collar bone, leg injuries, and head cuts yesterday when struck by a bicycle in the 100 block of Bates street northwest. He was treated at Sibley Hospital.

Await the Down Beat for 'Swingtime Review'

Mrs. Graff, Col. England Tie For Honors in Narcissus Show

Mrs. George U. Graff, 242 Peabody street northwest, and Col. W. H. England, 1344 Iris street northwest, tied for honors last night at the twenty-fifth annual narcissus show of the Takoma Horticultural Club, which opened at the Takoma branch of the public library, Fifth and Cedar streets northwest.

The silver cup offered to the exhibitor scoring the highest number of points in the specimen classes was graciously relinquished by Col. England to Mrs. Graff after the committee debated over the winner. Each scored 16 points. Mrs. Graff taking first honors in seven classes and having the second best flower in the show, and Col. England scoring firsts in five classes with the third best flower in the show. Mrs. Graff won the club's silver cup last fall for winning the most points in all the shows throughout the year.

Dr. Edwin C. Powell, of Aspen, Md., was given the blue ribbon for the best flower. He exhibited an all yellow seedling. A Lord Wellington scored for Mrs. Graff and Col. England's orange trumpet Beacon won third place.

In the arrangement classes, Mrs. Clarence S. Ross, 125 Maple avenue, Takoma Park, won the most points. Her exhibit of incomparabilis narcissus with pansies arranged around the base of the narcissus blooms in a boat-shaped glass dish drew much praise.

The show, which will be open today from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m., attracted the largest number of flower lovers the club has witnessed in many years.

Dr. Edwin C. Powell and Miss Alice Atwood judged the show but the committee members were judges for the best blooms. Oliver E. Sweet was exhibition chairman, and Mrs. Edwin C. Powell, vice chairman of the show.

Benefit Tax Hearings Extended

Prospects Fade For House Action Monday on District Unemployment Bill

Prospects that the McGehee bill proposing amendments to the District Unemployment Compensation Act would be called up in the House Monday, faded yesterday when the judiciary subcommittee of the House District Committee failed to complete hearings.

Representative Dan R. McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, said the hearing will be concluded tomorrow morning, after which the subcommittee will consider the measure in executive session, along with other bills.

McGehee said he hoped to report the legislation to the full committee Monday, but this will be too late to get it on the House calendar the same day. The Next District day will be May 13.

Chairman Jennings Randolph had agreed to call a special meeting of the full committee this week if the Judiciary subcommittee were ready to report the amendments.

The McGhee bill, which was drafted at a conference sponsored by the District Unemployment Compensation Board, was indorsed generally by all witnesses yesterday except spokesmen for the C. I. O.

An amendment was proposed, however, to restore the merit or experience rating by Lawrence E. Williams, president of the Board of Trade, who spoke for 21 business organizations. It also was urged by F. D. Cliffe, representative of the General Electric Co.

Because Cliffe complained that he was not given as much time as labor spokesmen, the subcommittee consented to hear him tomorrow morning before going into executive session.

Conflicting points of view among members of the subcommittee were aired as Representatives George J. Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, argued for low payroll taxes, and Representative Herman P. Eberharter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, for more liberal employe benefits.

Bates characterized the present system of accumulating taxes to the extent of $17,000,000 as "cockeyed."

Williams, while indorsing the McGehee bill in general, said it "ignores completely any incentive for stabilization of employment" in that it does not provide for a lower tax as a reward for steady payrolls. The experience rating formula was to become operative January 1, 1941, under the present law.

The American Federation of Labor, through Paul Scharrenberg, opposed any merit rating system on the ground that it would penalize the seasonal business and favor the prosperous year-round merchant.

Eberharter, who has sponsored a bill along the lines recommended by the C. I. O., questioned Scharrenberg and Arthur Schoenthal, of the Central Labor Union, on their indorsement of the McGehee bill when his measure carried more liberal benefits to unemployed.

"We never get all we want," said the A. F. of L. spokesman, "but this bill is generous."

Sidney Katz, secretary-treasurer of Maryland and District Industrial Union Council, indorsed the Eberharter bill and expressed opposition to the sliding scale tax rate proposed in the McGehee bill.

Rufus S. Lusk, of the Washington Taxpayers' Association, pointed out that Washington business men have been paying $5 for every dollar needed to carry out the provisions of the unemployment compensation act and indorsed the recommendations of the Board of Trade.

Leifur Magnusson, of the Monday Evening Club, asked allowances for dependents of the unemployed, while Mrs. Irene Lang, of the Women's Trade Union League, asked that the Unemployment Compensation Board be enlarged to seven members and for added unemployment benefits.

Church Lacks Vital Spark, Laymen Told

'Sense of Wonder In Religion' Needed, Dr. Gray Asserts

Four hundred members of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association, mingling last last night at their eleventh dinner, heard pleas for the recovery of America's sense of spiritual wonder and obedience.

Packing Shallenberger Hall at Calvary Baptist Church, they were told by Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of American University, that while the Christian church is more intelligent than it has ever been, it gravely lacks a vital spark.

"We must recover the sense of wonder in our religion, not just for our individual experience, but for our concern about our national life today," he declared.

Among the many distinguished guests presented by Page McK. Etchison, Religious Work Secretary of the Central "Y" and president of the 15,000-member Bible group, was Dr. Frank Lenz, International "Y" secretary, of New York City, whom Etchison recalled as having joined with him in attending the 1936 World Sunday School Association Convention in Oslo, Norway, now in the grip of the German army.

Among the other guests were Fire Chief Stephen Porter, vice president of the Harrison Men's Bible Class of Congress Street Methodist Church; Inspector William Harrison, founder of that class; William A. Atkins, president of the Maryland Federation of Men's Bible Classes, and Mrs. Atkins. The latter is sister of E. Stanley Jones, world-noted missionary.

Also present were Dr. Charles E. Resser, president of the District of Columbia Sunday School Association, and his daughter, Mrs. Helen Gates; Leonard De Gast, general secretary of the Central "Y;" George E. Harris, executive secertary of the Bible group. Music was furnished by Granville and Thomas Leef, brothers from St. Alban's Episcopal Choir, and William Bishop, Wilda Savage, Madge Everette, Geraldine Grumbly and Lucille Shannon Etchison. William R. Schmucker led group singing.

Capital News In Brief

But Who's Eerie?

An open front door and a mysterious burglar alarm at the old Walsh mansion, 2020 Massachusetts avenue northwest, gave half a dozen policemen and investigators from the burglar alarm company a busy half hour last night.

Patrolmen surrounded the house and searched the interior at length with flashlights. They found no trace of a robber, no explanation of the front door.

Commented one of the officers: "It was eerie."

Reels Under Blow

The Washington office of Fox Movietone News hoped yesterday that all would remain quiet in Washington from a newsreel standpoint, because a thief had smashed a window of a Movietone car and made off with eight valuable camera lenses, all the local office possessed.

The car was parked in an alley behind the Munsey Building. The lenses were specially made for the company's cameras and won't fit any others.

Census Finds Daniel Webster, Distant Kin of Statesman

Daniel Webster at the well

Relative, 74, Lives in Wooden Shack With Eight Pet Canaries in Shadow Of Southeast Development of New Homes

The census taker traveled up a muddy, grass-grown lane in southeast Washington yesterday, and could not believe his eyes.

Living in a low-ceilinged room of a dilapidated wooden shack, and drawing his water from a 65-year-old well with an old oaken bucket, they found Daniel Webster, 74.

Nearby is a row of shiny new houses, boasting every modern convenience including electricity, running water and refrigeration.

Yet to step through the backyard of the still unweathered brick cottage at 518 Lebaum street, back to the old house at the rear, is to step into the past, an age which lived more slowly and closer to nature, an age which Daniel Webster—distant kin of the famous statesman—knows well.

Yesterday Webster told his story:

"Yes, I was born in Anacostia and I reckon I'm about the oldest inhabitant hereabouts.

"I'm a carpenter, just like my daddy afore me. Of course, I ain't much good for climbing and all that now, so for the last couple of months I been living on one of these old age pensions from the Federal Government."

His visitors were interested in the ancient well.

"It's 32 feet deep," said Webster. "Dug by a man name of Allen, they say."

The bucket chain, Webster explained, used to run on wooden pulleys, "but somebody stole 'em." Now he uses an iron pulley and chain.

"The water's sweet," he said, sipping it.

Four families along the road formerly used the well until, last summer, the city installed a hydrant at the end of the lane. Now Webster is the well's only customer.

Congress Heights and Anacostia have changed a lot, Webster reminisced, since his boyhood.

"I used to come up on the Heights to follow the gypsies. They always had bears with them and we kids used to tag along."

"Then later I came to hunt coon and possum. This used to be good coon and possum country.

Evidently Webster's father was a notable man.

"He only lived to be 94," the son said yesterday, "but he was a powerful eater. Some folks said it was the indigestion. I was one of his 16 kids."

But something of the old southeast Washington lives on.

"The herring ought to be running soon down near Blue Plains, where Oxen Run and Barnaby Branch come together. I've fished right smart at Blue Plains. My daddy used to put up 1,000 herring every year from there," Webster mused.

The old man turned to go into his house, heated by a wood stove, to feed eight pet canaries.

But he stopped to pick something up in his hand and squeeze it. Gripped fondly in his palm was a lump of loamy Congress Heights soil.

School Board Hits Liquor Permits to 6

Reaffirms Opposition To Licenses to Sell In Stores Where Children Frequent

The Board of Education yesterday reaffirmed its opposition to sale of alcoholic beverages in stores patronized by school children, even though the store is as much as 1,000 feet distant from the nearest school.

By unanimous vote, the board decided to register its disapproval of six liquor license applications upon which the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board will soon conduct hearings. In two instances opposition was based on the fact that the stores sell ice cream, candy and other items bought principally by children.

Close proximity to schools was given as the reason for the other four rejections.

It was pointed out that 1200 Third street southwest and 3901 Benning road northeast, for which licenses have been sought, are about 1,000 fet from the nearest school. The board took the position, however, that since these stores would sell children's merchandise as well as liquor they should be denied licenses.

Approval was given recommendations for promotion of two teachers to the rank of principal in the elementary schools where they are now employed. They are Miss Edith M. Williams, of Shepherd School, and Miss M. H. Stohlman, Amidon School.

Appointed to the advisory committee on vocational education were Charles H. Tompkins, Austin S. Donaldson and Mrs. Evelyn Bright Buckley, who will succeed three members who resigned.

Superintendent Frank W. Ballou reported total public school enrollment as of April 11 was 92,855, compared with 93,205 on the corresponding date in 1939. The sharpest drop is in the number of elementary pupils—734 less than last year's figure.

Miss Kate Scully Robbed of Ring

Miss Kate H. Scully, socially prominent daughter of Mrs. Genevieve Scully, of 2431 Kalorama road northwest, was robbed of a diamond and platinum ring valued at $180, police reported. The ring was taken from a dresser drawer in her home, she said.

Three gold and diamond rings worth $275 were stolen from James C. Carter, of 5132 Fulton street northwest.

A Look Behind the Scenes of the 49th D. A. R. Congress

By Robert Devore
Post Staff Writer

SEVEN HUNDRED WOMEN AND GIRLS are keeping the wheels turning at the Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The Post found this out yesterday after getting lost in a labyrinth of corridors in the basement of Constitution Hall and talking with Tom Wrigley, the press relations man who knows everything.

Wrigley produced Miss Martha Morris, Cleveland Heights, Ohio, chairman of the pages' committee, and Mrs. Frank H. Towner, wife of a Washington physician, who heads the house committee.

Miss Morris has in her charge 332 pages, the "girls in white" who come from as far away as Montana to carry messages for delegates; to find lost pocketbooks, gloves, umbrellas, overshoes; to arrange themselves in seemingly endless processions carrying 76 flags of the Nation, the States, the Pan-American Union and, for the first time, a full-sized edition of the District of Columbia's five-striper.

It's a 24-hour job, around-the-clock ministering to 4,000 women who sometimes are too excited to get into an evening gown alone. It's a task for a young lady with discretion and tact who knows when her eyes or her ears have picked up an item "you can't even carry home to your own mother, though it's an awful thing not to do."

Mrs. Towner will average 13 hours a day during the Congress supervising the work of 280 house committeewomen. They stand guard at the convention hall doors, return strayed delegates to committee meetings, arrange trips to Annapolis and Williamsburg, tell delegates when and where to eat. And they had to decide how to handle tactfully the woman who wanted to know where she could find the beauty parlor where you could get a hair wave and a cup of coffee at the same time.

Presiding at the lost-and-found table in the lobby yesterday were Mrs. Samuel West Russell and Mrs. Seabury Quinn with a broad assortment of jewelry and accessories and wondering when one delegate would become aware of the fact that last Monday she lost a pocketbook containing $16.

But busier, perhaps, than all the backstage workers was Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., the president general, who must by this time have discovered she has something in common with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. In one day, Mrs. Robert's out-of-session schedule sent her to 16 luncheons, dinners, teas, assemblies.

Harris Seeks Batting Power With Early Today Against Sox

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1940 19

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Bob Feller is credited with pitching the first no-hit game in the history of opening games in the big leagues, but did he?... in 1909 when the Giants played Brooklyn in the opening game, Leon Ames of the Giants, did not allow a hit in the first nine innings . . . In the thirteenth, a home run by Harry Lumley beat Ames . . . Arch McDonald clicked sensationally on his Nation-wide network broadcast the night before the season opened when he said "Bobby Feller is the best pitcher in baseball, and young Kirk Higbe, of the Phillies, is the best pitcher in the National League." . . . A few hours later, Feller pitched his no-hitter against the White Sox and Higbe beat the Giants with three hits . . . Zeke Bonura is confident Bill Terry will be begging him to return to the line-up within a week . . . His successor at first base, Babe Young, has been a pathetic figure with the bat.

Povich

The pride and the treasury of the National Professional Football League has suffered a pretty awful blow . . . the cereal company which last year bought the blanket rights to the broadcasts of the league's games, has called it quits and the teams must find new sponsors . . . Sale of the radio rights netted the Redskins approximately $5,000 last season . . . The Washington-White Sox trade of last winter was shockingly reflected in the opening games of the two teams . . . at the time of the deal, it was acknowledged that the White Sox were taking on a risk in Taft Wright's outfielding and that the Nats would suffer many a headache from Gerry Walker's base running . . . Well, Wright misplayed Rollie. Hemsley's triple to give Cleveland the winning run, and in Washington, at about the same hour, Walker was pulling some screwy base running that cost the Nats the tying run.

Seven thousand little trees will never grow up to be tall cedars . . . they've been bought by the Virginia Gold Cup Racing Association for use as brush fences at the annual meeting on May 4 . . . Bowie, once the favorite running ground of long shots, set a new Maryland record at its last meeting when more than 50 per cent of the favorites won . . . it wasn't so many years ago that the only way to get a Bowie favorite home was to lead him around the track on a leash. It was no empty honor they gave Senator Dunnigan, of New York, when they permitted him to buy the first mutuel ticket sold in the State . . . he bought a ticket on a 6-to-1 winner . . . the Millsdale Stable which neglected to nominate Andy K for the Preakness but got him into the race the other day by paying a $1,500 starting fee, tossed a bouquet toward the Laurel track . . . because the Millsdale Stable thinks Laurel is the best training track in the country, all of Andy K's Derby and Preakness preps will be held there.

Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis three times have been forced to hunt new living quarters in Washington within the past two years because of their host of feminine admirers . . . the girl-shy Nats last year moved to Anacostia in an attempt to elude giddy babes who make goo-goo eyes at them . . . on occasion, Lewis and Travis have found their car loaded with high school girls after making their way to the players' parking lot after the game . . . the only solution to that problem they could think of was driving their car home and then running for it, leaving their admirers to their own devices for getting to their own homes . . . since their Anacostia hideout was exposed, Travis and Lewis are now living in Chevy Chase in what thus far has been welcome seclusion . . . Heinie Miller must be ill . . . the N. B. A. hasn't issued a special bulletin on the title situation for nearly 24 hours . . . Jimmy Erwin reports that Petey Sarron, former featherweight champ, has banked $75,000, mostly invested in utilities at Birmingham, Ala.

Up in Buffalo, sitting out the season because of a salary squabble with the Cleveland Indians, is a chap who could be a big help to the Red Sox in their pennant fight with the Yankees . . . He is Frankie Pytlak, a better catcher than anybody on the Boston Club, and why the Red Sox do not attempt to make a deal for him is already a first-rate mystery . . . Pytlak refuses to take a $3,000 cut in the $11,500 salary he was drawing at Cleveland . . . when a photographer asked a Boston ball player the name of the gentleman who was sitting with President Roosevelt at the opening game ceremonies, he was asking the proper party . . . he was asking Moe Berg, star of "Information Please." . . . Connie Mack didn't give Bennie McCoy $45,000 and a three-year contract at $10,000 a year for the sort of performance McCoy gave Mack in the opening game . . . McCoy went hitless and muffed a double-play throw at second base to give the Yankees the only run they scored off Chubby Dean.

The no-hit game loses considerable of its luster when it is recalled that Lefty Grove has never pitched one and that Walter Johnson was in the majors 13 years before he got his first and only . . . A no-hit performance can be as lucky as a hole-in-one . . . John Sabo, ousted as the head football coach at the University of Vermont, once had a tryout with the Nats as a catcher . . . S. G. Leoffler, owner of the Riverside Areana, is unenthused over his prize fight promotion and threatens to pull out of the fight business unless his next show fetches a profit . . . he doesn't like prize fighting and left the premises last week coincidentally with the appearance of the first two fighters in the ring.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, April 17.—All hail to Bobby Feller, but did it occur to you that his was the 103d no hit game pitched since they began keeping records in 1875? . . . It is 18 years, come April 30, since the last perfect (no man reach first base) game was pitched. It was by Charley Robertson of the White Sox against Detroit. There have only been six such games in baseball history . . . Bill Terry probably knows best, but everybody wished he had left Nick Witek in there Tuesday in the ninth inning of the Giant- Phillies game. Witek had kicked away Carl Hubbell's fine game by booting a double play ball in the eighth to set the stage for Gus Suhr's game-winning home run. In the ninth it was Witek's turn to bat with two outs and the tying runs on base, but Terry had had enough of him by that time and jerked him.

CONSIDINE

New York University promised Ken Strong a job on its coaching staff, at the first vacancy, then didn't give it to him . . . Al Vanderbilt won't be upset if he loses a little at Belmont, provided he is able to do all the things he wants to do during the track's coming meeting . . . Moose McCormick, the old Giants pinch hitter, will head the list of sports lecturers at Christy Walsh's Academy of Sport at the World's Fair . . . Walsh asks us to help him pick 1939's outstanding sports figure. We'd guess Bucky Walters.

Jack Bromwich writes that he won the Queensland, New South Wales and Victorian tournaments, and lost to Jack Crawford in the Australian grass court play. "Unfortunately," he adds, "no team will leave Australia this year. All the boys, including myself, will be in camp before very long." . . . Ray Dumont's proposal that umpires be wired for sound so that the fans could listen in on their decisions and also watch all the gems which drop from the artists' lips during arguments, will meet with only a sneer from Bill Klem. Klem still could be heard all over the largest ballyard, if he cared to force his pipes. He developed terrifying volume in his early days as an umpire, when he used to strengthen his voice by going off into a woods and bellowing by the hour.

My Seattle spy, Bob Cahn, writes that Jimmy Phelan has a positive All America in Dean McAdams—if they can teach the fellow to spell . . . Lee Savold, whose rise toward a Louis bout was rudely halted by a crude third-rater, cracked his left thumb the other night when he knocked out Irish Eddie Boyle in a comeback match.

Here are some bristling excerpts from H. J. Res. 510, which is the Seventy-sixth Congress' name for Representative Kennedy's clean-up-boxing bill: Whereas the evil practices that have grown up in connection with commercial boxing have attained the proportions of a national scandal . . . Whereas it is alleged that the control of boxing by gangsters and racketeers has reached such a stage that the States are powerless to cope with the problem . . . No license shall be given to a person of bad moral character or a person who has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude . . . Etc., etc., . . . But if that goes through, Mr. Congressman, who'll be left to fight?

Harry Jeffra Easily Outpoints Tannaka In Eight-Rounder

Hagerstown, Md., April 17 (AP).—Harry Jeffra, of Baltimore, former bantamweight champion now campaigning as a featherweight, easily outpointed Hitioshi Tannaka, of the Philippines, in an eight-round bout tonight. Jeffra weighed 125, Tannaka 122.

Jeffra's boxing ability and superior ring generalship completely eclipsed Tannaka's. The Baltimorean led all the way and repeatedly thumped the Filipino with a shower of rights and lefts.

Two six-rounders ended in draws. They featured Joe Sole, 132, of Baltimore, vs. Jackie Senna, 135, of Washington, and Buddy Holmes, 160, Baltimore, vs. Arthur Johnson, 162, Washington.

Jack Dempsey, scheduled to referee the main event, was forced to leave early and worked the Holmes-Johnson bout instead.

Rotterdam Sports Editor Likens Gridders to Phillies

By the Associated Press

Hoboken, N. J., April 17.—Alfred Van Sprang, 22-year-old sports editor of the Het Vanderland, of Rotterdam, is familiar with the whims and foibles of the Philadelphia National League Baseball club.

Arriving today on the Volendam for a six-month tour of the United States, Van Sprang remarked that mobilization in Holland had weakened the Netherlands football team "so much that even Luxembourg beat us."

"The Luxembourgers are like your Phillies," he explained.

George Isemann Taken to Hospital

New Haven, Conn., April 17 (AP).—George L. Isemann, of Washington, D. C., executive secretary of the National Duckpin Bowling Congress, was taken to the New Haven Hospital late today where attaches said he was suffering from a severe cold and throat infection.

Isemann came here Friday for the opening of the National duckpin bowling championships.

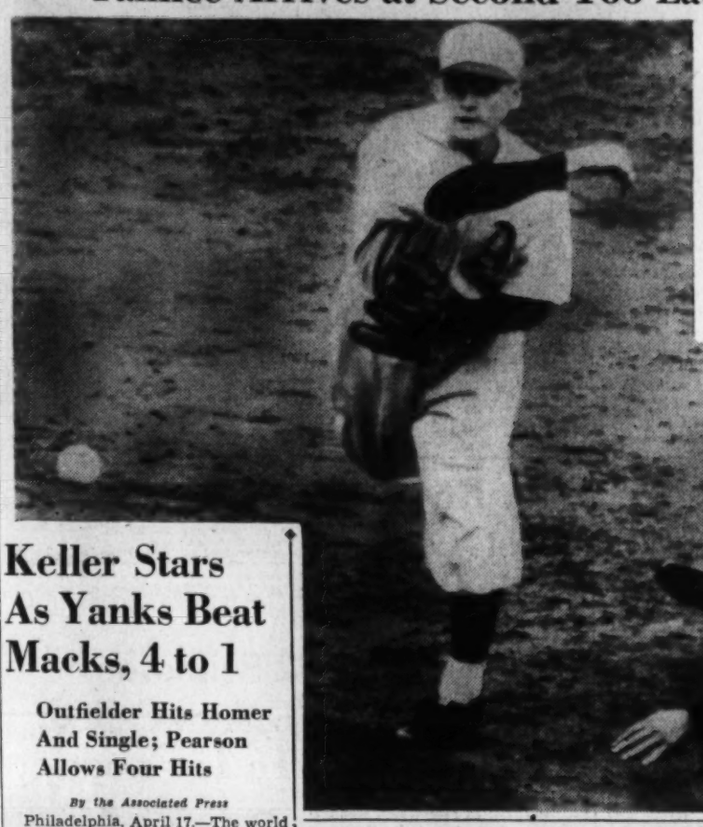
Yankee Arrives at Second Too Late—It's a Double Out



The New York Yankees' Tommy Henrich missed the boat when he tried to make it to second on Gordon's grounder yesterday in the game with the Athletics in Philadelphia. Here he is arriving late as Benny McCoy throws to first to catch Gordon for a double out in the eighth. Yankees won, 4-1

Keller Stars As Yanks Beat Macks, 4 to 1

Outfielder Hits Homer And Single; Pearson Allows Four Hits

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, April 17.—The world champion New York Yankees slipped into the groove today to whip the Philadelphia Athletics, 4 to 1, on the four-hit pitching of Monte Pearson and the slugging of Charley Keller.

The sophomore outfielder led off in the sixth with a home run, batted in another score with a single and tallied once after drawing a base on balls.

The Yankees took control of the game in the fourth inning with their first run on Keller's walk and singles by Bill Dickey and Joe Gordon. They sewed it up with their final two runs in the seventh. Babe Dahlgren waited out a walk, Pearson sacrificed, Frank Crosetti singled and Red Rolfe forced Crosetti to let in one of the runs. Then George Selkirk and Keller singled to bring in the other.

Pearson allowed only one hit, a single by Bill Lillard, in the first five frames, but the Athletic escaped a shutout with a run in the sixth when Benny McCoy doubled and Wally Moses brought him home with a single to centerfield.

The A's other hit was a single by Babe Siebert in the seventh. Pearson struck out five and allowed only two bases on balls in giving a mid-season pitching performance.

The Yankees were permitted only seven hits by Nelson Potter before he was removed for a pinchhitter in the eighth and got none off Bill Beckman in the ninth but, as usual, made the most of what they obtained.

The day's seven other scheduled major league games were postponed because of unfavorable weather and even this one contest was played in raw, cold conditions that held the crowd down to an estimated 4,000.

General Mowlee Wins By Neck Over Heleno

Favorite Pays $4.70; 7,000 See 'Graw Feature on Heavy Track; Jockey Berg Rides to Wire Five Lengths in Front

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Havre de Grace, Md., April 17.—General Mowlee, running for the favorite players and owned by Howard Bruce, who is running for the Senate, made his first appearance of this season a winning one. The 4-year-old gelding, ridden by Jockey Mannie Berg, of Baltimore, came to the imaginary wire a neck in advance of Heleno, owned by H. C. Hatch. Five lengths farther back was H. W. Jackson's Ariel Toy.

The fourth winning favorite in a row, General Mowlee rewarded the faithful with a $4.70 mutuel. He turned in creditable time of 1:13 4-5 over a track as heavy as lead. Some 7,000 fans witnessed the sprint struggle involving only five starters.

Ariel Toy, in action for the first time this year, bounced out of the gate in front and set out for the turn with General Mowlee close up and under slight restraint while racing on the rail. Heleno, off poorly, had rushed up on the outside to join the two leaders. On the swing for the stretch, the three ran heads apart with General Mowlee still on the rail and in the worst going.

Heleno Takes Lead on Outside

In the stretch, Ariel Toy began to fade and Heleno, on the outside took a half-length lead. General Mowlee had punch left, however, and shot up to take about the same margin over Heleno. From that point to the wire riders and horses fought it out with the General the winner.

Spang, a well-played second choice, was disqualified after finishing second in the first race. The Pompey filly bumped Lady Jaffa and went on to finish a length and a half behind J. W. Y. Martin's Road Scraper, the winner in the field of nine. Jockey Wall, who rode Spang, was not blamed for the mishap. Lady Jaffa moved into second money. The show was a dead heat between Miss Identify and Chives.

Iskie, carrying 118 pounds, took down the purse in the second race while in charge of Jockey Danny

College Player Beats Favorite In Net Tourney

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., April 17.—In a modest manner, the River Oaks tennis tournament today began its annual custom of laughing up its sleeve while favorites sprayed the sidelines.

The only player to fall with a thud was Charles Harris, of West Palm Beach, Fla., but his fate was considered an ill omen by other seeded entrants.

The competition had proceeded through two rounds without so much as an inkling of surprise, when Bill Umstaedter, young Louisiana State University student, bounced Harris, No. 8 nationally, two seasons back, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2.

Bobby Riggs, the national champion, took off his sweater for the first time in turning back Lefty Brown, of Waco, 10—8, 8—6.

Brown kept Riggs on the hop through most of the match but the little Chicagoan pulled out his best shots when necessary.

A mixup in the pairing forced Frank Guernsey, Rice Institute's champion of intercollegiate tennis, and Charles Hare, England's No. 2 player, to play in the third round. Defending Titlist Guernsey won, 6—1, 7—5, although Hare had a 5—3 lead in the second set.

Bitsy Grant, the little Atlanta scrambler, had a little trouble with Frank Froehling, tall Northwestern University graduate, 6—1, 4—6, 6—2.

Stanford Star Turns in World Record Run

Steps Three-Quarter In 2:58.7; Clips Two Seconds Off Mark

By the United Press

Stanford University, Cal., April 17.—Paul Moore, of Stanford University, today was timed at a world's record in the three-quarter mile run, stepping the distance in 2:58.7 during a dual meet between Stanford and San Jose State.

Moore clipped nearly two seconds off the official world mark of 3:00.6 set by Jules Ladoumegue, of France, in 1931, and also bettered the unofficial world record of 2:59.5 made by Sidney Wooderson, of England, in London last June.

It was the second world record performance by Stanford athletes in less than a week. Last Saturday the Stanford mile relay team shattered the world record in 3:10.5 over the same track.

Ex-Tiger Recalls Amole's No-Hitter In 1900 Opener

By International News Service

Peoria, Ill., April 17.—The record books may not show that Bob Feller's glittering no-hit, no-run game ever was duplicated as an opening day achievement in major league baseball, but Harry Bay's memory does.

Bay, who played outfield for Detroit in 1900, the year the American League got going, said today he recalled distinctly that his team was the victim in the opening game that year.

"In our first game against Buffalo," Bay said, "Morris Amole shut us out without a hit and the Bisons won, 8 to 0."

A check-up of baseball files showed the American League kept no complete records until the following year, so the public will have to take Bay's word for it. Buffalo and Indianapolis then were members of the young circuit.

Nats Manager Adopts New Catching Policy, Stresses Need for More Potent Hitting

By Shirley Povich.

The trim figure of Jake Early and the batting power it represents will be injected into the Nats' lineup today against the Red Sox, Manager Bucky Harris announced yesterday.

Chafing at the anemic batting efforts of his club in the opening game, when the Nats were held to two hits by Lefty Grove, Harris indicated that he is embarking on a new policy with respect to his catching assignments.

Early, he indicated, would go behind the bat when the Nats face right-handed pitching, as they will today with Jim Bagby scheduled to go to the mound for Boston. The veteran Ferrell will be the Nats' catcher when the team is facing left-handed pitching.

Early's batting in the South was one of the bright features of the Nats' training trip, and Harris is impatient to learn to what degree he can rely on the strapping young rookie. "We need power," said Harris. "That is apparent. Early may give us the long hits we need. In any event, he is going to get his chance."

Hudson to Pitch

Recent rains curtailed the Nats' current series with the Red Sox to two games. With the outfield virtually flooded and the skies holding no prospect of a clear day, yesterday's game was called off at noon. The two teams will attempt to get in a game today, barring further downpour.

In the event of a clear day, Manager Harris will unveil Rookie Sidney Hudson in his big-league pitching debut. Harris is undeterred by the fact that Hudson is a recent graduate of the Class D Florida State League. "He has acted like a big league pitcher every time we've sent him to the mound this spring, and I think he's ready to pitch winning ball for us," said Harris.

New Pitching Strategy

Harris will not ask Hudson to pitch, however, if the day is cold or windy. His choice under those conditions will be Joe Haynes, who can call on more experience. The Nats' manager is studiously avoiding sending a left-hander against the right-handed hitting Red Sox, which accounts for the absence of Joe Krakauskas and Ken Chase from the series here.

Krakauskas and Chase will break into action later in the week against the Yankees, against whom they have always pitched with tolerable success. There is some alarm in the Nats' camp concerning Chase. In his last two starts, his fast ball has lost its fine edge, and h[illegible] and Harris are perplexed by that development.

The two-hit defeat by [illegible] not lightly dismissed by Harris, who refuses to share the belief [illegible] veteran southpaw was unbeatable last Tuesday. "We weren't taking our cuts up there at bat. We've beaten Grove when he has pitched better games than he pitched the other day. There'll be some changes in our line-up, if we don't start showing some power soon."

Nats' Jim Dean Goes to Charlotte For Seasoning

Big Jim Dean, loose-tongued rookie right-hander, was released by the Nats yesterday to their Charlotte farm team in the Piedmont League.

Dean came to the Nats in the deal that brought Pitcher Sidney Hudson from the Sanford club of the Florida State League last fall. Hudson was signed by the Nats, but Dean was given a contract with Charlotte.

Manager Bucky Harris was impressed with Dean's fast ball, but the big rookie showed a definite lack of control in exhibition games for the Nats. He goes to Charlotte on option and with minor league seasoning is expected to graduate to the Nats' staff.

Rollie Turns Little Lord Fauntleroy

Tribe's Hemsley Says 'Old Days' Are Over After Year of Behaving

By the Associated Press

Chicago, April 17.—Rollie Hemsley says his rollicking days are gone forever—and that this time he's going to make it stick.

It looks as though the good-looking Cleveland catcher means it. For a year he's been a model of deportment, a far cry from the "rollicking Bollie" who wended his marry, oftimes uproarious way through almost a decade of baseball, leaving an amazing trail of fines, suspensions and headaches.

"I've quit drinking," he grinned today as he relaxed under a rubdown of bruises suffered catching the no-hit blazers of Bob Feller. "I'll admit I must have been quite a problem for a while. But that's over now. I simply decided I'd have to quit to stay in the majors. No more of those old days for me."

Manager Oscar Vitt is convinced that Rollie means it. He feels so good about this reformation he even went so far as to admit that Mrs. Hemsley no longer travels

While Trainer Weisman (right) treated the shoulder bruises he suffered while catching Bob Feller's no-hitter Tuesday, Rollicking Rollie Hemsley, the erstwhile bad boy of the Indians, announced his roustering days were over, once and for all. "You can't get away with it forever," he philosophized

C. U. Trackmen Win in Triangular Meet, Score 103 Points

Gallaudet, A. U. Routed At Maryland

College Park Scene Of Event Run Over Muddy Track; Blues Surprise

Winning 12 events and tying another, Catholic University's powerful track team easily won an intracity triangular meet yesterday at College Park, scoring 103 points. Gallaudet was second with 32 while American University scored 28.

A muddy track conspired to keep all meet records intact. The itme for individual efforts was somewhat below the general standard although all teams showed to advantage in the field events.

Gallaudet's showing came as somewhat of a surprise, inasmuch as it was hardly expected that the Blues would beat out American University for second place. Neither team figured to extend C. U. in its victory.

Dead Heat in Mile Run

One of the features in the afternoon's entertainment was the mile run, in which John Corbett and Bernard Doyle, both of Catholic U., ran a dead heat in 4:00.6. Both Corbett and Doyle ran the last 100 yards evenly, while the remainder of the field straggled far behind.

Corbett later captured the 2-mile run in 10 minutes and 2 second, receiving little competition in this event. Corbett lapped the entire field in winning.

Star of Catholic's one-sided triumph was Jimmy Milks, who served his hoofing apprenticeship at Washington-Lee High. He placed second in the 440-yard dash, fourth in the shotput and ran in the anchor position on the winning relay team.

Pete Sachon Stars

Outstanding in the field events for the winners was Pete Sachon, erstwhile football and basketball star. Sachon won the discus, placed second in the shotput and third in the javelin.

Gallaudet clinched its second-place performance in the broad jump, last event on the program, when Max Brown, who had never competed in this event before, outjumped American's Allen Hinkel for third place.

The meet was transferred to College Park yesterday after an all-night rain left the C. U. track in poor condition. However, it is expected that the team will be able to stage its Saturday meet with William and Mary, Norfolk division, on its home track.

SHOTPUT—Won by Osinski (C. U.); second, Sachon (C. U.); third, Sliney (C. U.); fourth, Milks (C. U.). Distance, 38 feet.

Flying Waters Wins Again

Flying Waters won his third race of the spring in this State by taking the third race, an affair of 6 furlongs involving six horses. The Flying Heels gelding was all out to win by a neck over a fast-closing Interlace, owned by Eddie Talbert, of Washington. Nicky was third. Flying Waters was saddled by Pat Dwyer, leading trainer of the Maryland campaign, and paid $4.70.

Eddie Smith, Washington jockey, booted Fair Elise home by three lengths in the fifth race after the Hard Tack mare had been knocked off stride at the first turn of the mile and 70 yards test. Scarlet O., the favorite, was second and Nancy Mae was third. The winner paid $6.80 in the role of second choice.

Loeffler Visited By Eagles' Coach

Redverse Mackenzie, enterprising coach of the Washington Eagles, who steered his team to a second-place finish in its first season in Eastern Amateur Hockey League competition locally, is a visitor here.

Mackenzie made a hurried trip here in order to discuss business with S. G. Leoffler, sr., owner of the Eagles, prior to resuming his duties as golf professional and reopening his driving range in Montreal next week.

Mackenzie said that Len Burrage, veteran Washington defenseman, who was swamped with offers to play elsewhere at the close of the Eastern League season, definitely will return with the Eagles. John McTeer, husky young defenseman and one of the best prospects in the circuit, also will return here.

N.Y. Roller Takes Fifth in A. B. C. Despite Scorer

By International News Service

Detroit, April 17.—A "5-7" split in the tenth frame of his third game cost Vincent Murray, Schenectady, N. Y., possible leadership of the American Bowling Congress championships in Detroit today, and stopped him on 702 for a tenth place tie in the singles' honor column.

Murray, a distinguished-looking 35-year-old refrigeration engineer, was disturbed by two bobbles of the scorekeeper, a rare occurrence in A. B. C. firing.

He pyramided strikes despite the scorekeeper's errors, later corrected, for 243-257, and had 148 in the seventh frame of the last game. Needing to strike all the way for a potential title score of 238, he banged in ten counts in the eighth and ninth frames.

Milner Signs With 'Skins For 1940

WAYNE MILNER

Veteran Is 4th End In Line; Continues As Catholic U. Aide

Wayne Milner, regular end of last season's Redskins, signed his 1940 contract yesterday, General Manager Jack Espey announced. This makes four ends now in fold, Malone, Masterson, and McChesney having previously signed.

In addition, Milner will continue as end coach at Catholic University, a position he filled last year for the first time. His instruction had considerable to do with the Cardinals' fine performance in the Sun Bowl, in El Paso, Texas.

An All-American wingman at Notre Dame, Milner has been with the Redskins since 1936. He is expected to perform regularly this year for his fifth straight season.

Snead-Simpkins Bow in Exhibition At Newport News

By the Associated Press

Newport News, Va., April 17.—Sammy Snead, golf professional, formerly of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., carded a five-over-par 75 on the windy Old Dominion course here this afternoon, but he and his teammate, Jimmy Simpkins, Old Dominion Club champion, went down 2 and 1 to Wynsol Spencer, Virginia amateur champion, and Harry Wheeler, Peninsula titlist.

Snead, who took things easy during the 18-hole exhibition match, had to be content with second-best score as Spencer totaled a two-under-par 68. Simpkins shot a 78, Wheeler a 79. Spencer and Wheeler had a best ball of 67, while Snead and Simpkins scored a 72 in that manner. About 200 persons trailed the pro and three amateurs.

Turner Goes in for Double Feature Wrestling Tonight

Terror and O'Toole Share Billing With Hader and Kirelinko

The double feature craze hits Turner's Arena tonight, when Jack Hader and Matros Kirelinko waltz out to share the spotlight with The Terror and Tommy O'Toole in the headline wrestling attractions.

The Terror, or Bob Weatherly, has gone off the gold standard and will come out tonight adorned in blue trunks and shirt to face the Irish lad who started out to be a boxer, but decided he'd better try something safe—like wrestling.

O'Toole was once a sparring partner for John Henry Lewis, former world's light-heavyweight champion. The Terror last week was disqualified for ungentlemanly tactics with Ernie Dusek.

Warren Bockwinkle, 220-pound St. Louis groan artist, returns to swap glares with Jim Coffield. Rudy Dusek and Tommy Rae will square off in another preliminary, and Abe Kaplan and Abe Yourist open the business at 8:30 p. m.

Lucy Rose Boosts Lead In Pin Race

Rosslyns Score Over Lucky Strike; Miss Gulli Drops Back

The battle for high average bowler in the Ladies District League, that has monopolized league interest since Rosslyn took a big lead in the pennant race in midseason, was apparently clinched by Lucy Rose last night.

Mrs. Rose rolled a 358 set for the champions while Lorraine Gulli, leading the Lucky Strike team in an odd game defeat at the hands of Rosslyn, was able to count only 314 sticks and dropped 108 pins back with only two matches remaining.

Evelyn Naylor rolled a 135 game and Blance Wootton a 381 set for Rosslyn. Lucille Young's 362 set and a 355 by Jesse Sacrey helped Ice Palace blank Arcade Pontiac, with Mabelle Herting's 327 high for the losers.

LUCKY STRIKE

Julie Singer and his Wardman Park teammates set season's records in the D. G. S. League at Lucky Strike, Singer rolling a 443 set, including a 156 game, while the team rolled a 1,845 team set in winning three from Wilkins. High game went to Jake Schwartz with 158.

The pace-setting M. I. N. team and the second-place Commerce quintet marked time by winning odd-game decisions in the Lucky Strike Ladies League, and enabled the former to win the pennant. Thelma Bonini, of Social Security, was high for the night with 335.

The pennant winning Washington Centennial team increased its lead to five games in the Eastern Star League by winning three games with 536 and 1,495 totals, high for the night. Martha Kaufman, bowling with the Bethany team, had high for the night of 137 and 340.

ARCADIA

Ollie Zoerner and his National Metropolitan Bank teammates swept the top totals in the Bankers' League at Arcadia, the former rolling a 166 game and 415 set and the team game and set of 628 and 1,734.

The Bees had the bases loaded in the second with none out when Guinn, Hornet second sacker, hit a line drive to Asheville's shortstop Rocky Rhawn, who caught the ball, tagged second and then threw to first to complete the triple killing.

Himself an alumnus of C. U., Curran long has been a supporter of the Cardinal athletic teams and his wit and ready tongue are a famous banquet fixture in the District.

Meanwhile, considerable interest has been aroused as to the probable football leader to succeed co-Captains Al Calabrese and Rocco Pirro who will be graduated this June. It is the custom to elect the new Cardinal athletic leaders each year at the annual banquet.

Miller Play Starts Women's Golf Action

Washington Club Host to 120 Stars Today; Team Matches Rained Out for Second Time in Six Days

The first and second team matches of the Women's District Golf Association were rained out again yesterday, marking the second postponement in six days. The threat of rain at starting time, as well as the gloomy outlook and downpour during the night, caused the cancellation.

They will try again tomorrow, the first teams at Woodmont and the second at Washington Golf and Country Club, in the second round of the nine-week play. Mrs. J. C. Dale has not decided on the postponement date for yesterday's matches, but due to the crowded schedule it may be set back until the last half of the series.

Meanwhile the women's golf committee at Washington Golf Club is hoping for clear skies today for the annual Phyllis Keeler Miller Memorial Invitation event. The field of 120 will start at 8:40, with Mrs. O. M. Reed, of the host club, the first off the tee.

The course will be crowded until 12:15, when Mrs. Tom Ryan, of Belle Haven, is the 120th player to go off.

The field includes most of the city's low-handicap players, plus the defending champion, Mrs. C. P. Medley. Players may bring their own caddies. The event is not on the W. D. G. A. card, but is sponsored by the Washington club, in memory of the late Mrs. Miller, prominent in local women's golf.

Between today's cup play and tomorrow's team matches, the women golfers are also busy with entries for the Mrs. Frank R. Keefer Cup play, that closes Monday, April 22, at 1 p. m. with Mrs. H. W. Rowan at Wisconsin 7142.

The Keefer Cup tournament will be played Wednesday and Thnrsday, April 24-25, at Chevy Chase, over the 36-hole route. The handicap limit is 18 but players with handicaps through 24 are eligible.

The first day's 18-hole round will eliminate all but the 32 low net scores, and ties. The event is also open to members of the Maryland State Golf Association, in addition to the District. Mrs. Gale E. Pugh, first vice president of the District Association, from Manor Club, won the 36-hole medal play handicap tourney last year.

David "Scotty" Ross, one of the top scholastic linksmen, won the last two holes from Capt. Boylan of the Little Hoyas to win, 2 up, with a 73. Brown defeated C. Sullivan in the fifth singles match but they were the only Rockville points of the day.

Georgetown Prep, a former power in schoolboy golf, thus scored its sixteenth point out of a possible 18 in two matches and looms as the team to beat for the title won by Bethesda last year.

Tomorrow's big card finds the Little Hoyas meeting Bethesda in a crucial match at Congressional; Central vs. Roosevelt at Columbia; Anacostia vs. Western at Washington; Gonzaga vs. St. John's at Manor, and Rockville vs. Blair at Capital.

Ross (R) defeated Boylan, 2 up; McDonnell (G) defeated Cherrington, 5 and 4. Best ball—Georgetown Prep, 3 and 2.

Brayer (G) defeated McElfish, 6 and 5; E. Sullivan (G) defeated Haynes, 3 and 4. Best ball—Georgetown Prep, 6 and 5.

Brown (R) defeated C. Sullivan, 1 up; Murray (G) defeated Hill, 5 and 3. Best ball—Georgetown Prep, 2 up.

On Fishing

Sportsman is defined—one who is fair and generous, a good loser and a graceful winner.

ACKERMAN

No real conservationists, in our mind, can find a more adequate or fitting creed. For that reason we take exception when it is said conservationist first and sportsman second.

We believe the sportsman must be made first: by following field or stream. How else will he know the value of that which later he tries to conserve. The person subscribing to the tenents of conservation as a hobby is often as detrimental to real conservation as a poacher or a fish-hog, because he leans just as far toward the accomplishment of his purpose as the others do toward theirs . . . one takes all, showing a need of conservation; the other takes none and an unbalanced condition is corrected by all-wise natural law. Why not follow the in-between path with a fair bag or creel, be generous toward those who might have different ideas? Teach those, who might not know the right way, by following the sportsman's creed yourself—a good loser and a graceful winner, and you'll be a real conservationist.

Eastern Air Lines Bill Briggs flew down to the Brownsville end of the line last week where he changed to a Pan-American clipper for Mexico City. We had the idea it was business that was the reason for the trip in the first place, but now—we have our doubts, for the airmail card today was postmarked Acapulco. For those who might believe it a surburb of Mexico City we hasten to add . . . Acapulco is 120 miles down the mountains, a big game fishing port . . . striped marlin . . . Pacific sailfish . . . broadbill . . . rooster fish . . . and you can bet your bottom dollar Bill Briggs is out dragging baits across the Pacific waters.

The United States Bureau of Fisheries has been actively engaged for the past several weeks in the collecting and incubating of yellow perch spawn at their Fort Belvoir hatchery. Fort Belvoir is the Army Post, a few miles down the Potomac on the Virginia side.

Adult yellow perch are purchased from commercial fishermen operating in Gunston Cove and Marumseco Creek at 3½ cents for females and 1¾ cents for males. The adult perch are placed in live pens where they are allowed to spawn naturally. The spawn is collected and placed in hatching baskets in Marumseco Creek and in the battery at the station to hatch out.

Middie Rally In 9th Falls Run Short

Smith Chased After 5-Hit Performance; Mlynarski's Run Decides Close Game

Annapolis, Md., April 17.—Georgetown baseball team won a 3-2 game from the Naval Academy today when Lou Ghecas got a two-base hit in the tenth inning.

A Georgetown lead of 2 to 0 going into the ninth faded when the Midshipmen broke through to tie the score and drive Johnny Smith from the mound. He had allowed five hits.

In the tenth Schmidt rapped out a single into leftfield. Ralph Anderson, Navy catcher, managed to catch him off first, but doubles by Hank Mlynarski and Ghecas brought in the winning run.

Georegtown got two runs in the third frame when Jules Koshlak singled, Smith doubled and Schmidt drove a hard one into leftfield scoring both runners.

Howard Schoenbaum pitched the full game for the Midshipmen. Georgetown got to him for six doubles but Anderson twice caught men off base. He also tossed Schmidt out as he was attempting to steal third. Neither team made an error.

Although Navy men got on second in the fourth and fifth frames, the Midshipmen failed to score until the ninth. Sherwood Werner singled, Wallace walked, Blue moved them up with a sacrifice and Anderson singled through the infield.

G. U. Nine Plays Temple Tomorrow

Georgetown University's baseball team returns to Georgetown's diamond tomorrow afternoon for a 2:30 o'clock game with Temple University's Owls.

Coach Joe Judge, with a majority of his pitchers available, due to recent postponements, probably will select two alternating pitchers from Vinnie Powers and Bill Wixted, right-handers, and John Dieckelman, a southpaw.

Simultaneously, Georgetown's tennis team is to entertain American University's netmen on the Hilltop courts at 2:30 o'clock. An earlier meeting between these teams was postponed because of rain.

Georgetown University's freshman game with George Washington frosh yesterday was postponed, due to wet grounds.

26 Out of 30 Scribes Pick K. C. Blues

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, April 17.—There really isn't much use playing out the American Association schedule for 1940, the cricuit's 30 sports writers having decided how the teams will finish, but the eight clubs are going ahead with their plans to launch the campaign Thursday afternoon.

The scribes disagreed with prexy George Trautman's prediction that it would be an eight-team race, 26 of them selecting the Kansas City Blues to repeat as the No. 1 club. The Louisville Colonels, playoff winners and little world series champs, were ranked second, although the Kentuckians grabbed only one first-place vote from the newspapermen.

Two other "dissenters" picked Minneapolis to take the flag—both were from Minneapolis, by the way—while another gave Indianapolis the nod. Based on an eight-points-for-first, seven-for-second, etc., basis, the clubs finished like this in the scribes' standing:

Kansas City, 235; Louisville, 190; Minneapolis, 184; Indianapolis, 135; St. Paul, 128; Milwaukee, 89; Columbus, 70, and Toledo, 49.

Thursday's opening day schedule calls for Minneapolis at Louisville, St. Paul at Indianapolis, Kansas City at Toledo, and Milwaukee at Columbus.

President Trautman had his umpires in Columbus for a last-minute "skull" session this week.

The season closes September 15.

5 Former Winners In Boston Marathon

Boston, April 17 (AP).—Five former winners, who have accounted for 13 of the 43 marathons run since 1897, were on the entry list of 193 tonight when the Boston A. A. completed its field for Friday's Hopkinton-Boston race.

Only two of the former victors, however, were rated as serious contenders for this year's event, Ellison (Tarzan) Brown, of Westerly, R. I., who set the course record of 2:28.51 4/5 last year, and Rhode Island's other two-time winner, Leslie Pawson, of Pawtucket.

Their outstanding rival appeared to be Don Heinicke, of Baltimore, who finished second to Brown here last year and recently won the Pat Dengis Memorial Marathon in his home city.

Large Gallery on Hand At Spring Trials Of Loudoun Club

Special Dispatch to The Post

Round Hill, Va., April 17.—Wally Berger, a white and orange setter bitch senior puppy, handled by Herman F. Smith, of Salem, Va., won the puppy stake in the opening of the spring field trials of the Loudoun Gun Dog Club held on the J. D. Thomas farm, near Round Hill today. The puppy made the widest cast, her applications were good and she hunted the birdy places.

Thirty-four puppies were entered and the first brace was put down at 7:45 this morning. A large gallery was on hand to witness the running. The fog was so heavy that trials were suspended for several hours until the clearing was better.

Second place went to Jake's Sea View Lady, white liver and ticked pointer bitch, owned by John Cassatt and handled by E. G. King, of Lingletown, Pa., and third place was won by Sue's County Queen, white and livered pointer bitch, owned by E. H. Hartage, of Galesville, Md., and handled by R. E. Christian, of Deerfield, Va.

The best unplaced junior puppy in today's trials was Daredevil, a white, black and ticked setter, dog owned by V. P. Hawse, of Staunton, and handled by Montague Gammon, of Gore, Va.

The all-age stake has 30 dogs entered and will be run tomorrow, and the member's shooting stake, with 20 dogs entered, will follow.

The judges are C. B. Stickley, of Vauclaus, Va., and Benton Snider, of Winchester, Va.

Wife Beat Him, Fighter Contends In Divorce Suit

By the Associated Press

Oklahoma City, April 17.—Eugene "Chief" Paris, one-time contender for the world's middleweight boxing title, won a divorce today on grounds that his married life was "just one fight after another."

District Judge Frank P. Douglass found that the boxer's wife, Ethel, "did assault and abuse the plaintiff and threaten him with bodily harm."

"While engaged in said profession he acquired a high standard in the professional art of fisticuffs and ring ethics in that he only fought for prizes and money and with male opponents of equal weight," the decree stated.

Judges Named For Virginia Kennel Show

Over 300 Entries For Charlottesville Show on Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., April 17.—Officials of the University of Virginia Kennel Club announced today that the following have accepted invitations to act as judges at the annual dog shown to be held Saturday at Frys Spring:

Sporting group, Dr. Thomas Butler Snyder, of Kimberton, Pa.; hound group, Edward Dana Knight, of Charleston, W. Va.; working group, Carey W. Lindsay, of Towson, Md.; terrier group, Alfred Rosenberg, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Jere B. Collins, of Oyster Bay, Long Island; spaniel group, W. Fred Ford, of Media, Pa., and Dr. Charles R. Davis, of College Park, Md.; greyhounds, whippets, Lewis J. Pegram, of Baltimore; Doberman pinschers, Dr. William R. Compton, of McLean, Va.; children's handling class, Mrs. C. V. Blagden, of Blue Bell, Pa.

The bench show committee announces receipt of well over 300 entries to date, with dogs from as far as Canada and California and no particular breed predominating in numbers unless it be cocker spaniels. One of the surprises disclosed in the daily records is a large entry of English bulldogs from nearby Virginia. For this fine old breed, entries have been received from Lynchburg, Staunton, Waynesboro, Covesville and elsewhere.

Hundreds of fox hunters in this section will have an opportunity to see four Virginia foxhound packs—five couple of hounds in each pack, with servants in the livery of the hunt. Entered to date are the two best-known Albemarle packs, Farmington and Keswick; the pack of the Deep Run Hunt Club, Richmond, and the famous pack of Dan Sands, of Middleburg.

Interesting events are scattered throughout the day's program, starting at 10 o'clock. The children's handling class will be held at 4:30 in the afternoon; foxhound packs at 8 o'clock, and the big award of the day—best in show—scheduled for 9:30, with W. Fred Ford as judge.

Eagles Lose To Juniata Nine, 16 to 4

Visitors Score 9 Runs in 9th Inning On American Field

Held to a mild 7-4 lead in the first eight innings by American U., the Juniata College nine rained a 9-run, ninth inning barrage on the hapless Eagles yesterday to take a 16-4 victory at the Nebraska avenue diamond.

In their third straight loss of the season, the Eagles overcame a 2-0 lead taken by the invaders in the first frame with single runs in the second and fourth. Three more Juniata tallies in the fifth and two in the sixth overshadowed American's pair in the sixth. Then came the ninth.

Three bases on balls off Bruce Etchison, a pair of infield errors, a double by First Baseman Leopold and singles by Valigorsky, Seiman and Reigner accounted for the runs.

The lone bright spot in the Eagles' shellacking was the slugging of Hugo Schulze, shortstop. He rapped a double in the fourth and scored on Morrison's single, and in the third pounded out a triple, later scoring on Newby's double. Starting Pitcher Jim Whitlet allowed only four of Juniata's 10 hits in his six-inning stint.

Virginia League Opens Season On May 2

Special Dispatch to The Post

Harrisonburg, Va., April 17.—The Virginia League, one of organized baseball's youngest circuits, will start its second season with the same four clubs that fought it out last year, according to the schedule just released by President Ray Ryan.

The schedule was not adopted until almost the last minute, as Ryan still had hopes of finding a sixth club. Waynesboro was willing to take the fifth franchise, but the sixth could not be found.

Harrisonburg, Staunton, Lynchburg and Salem-Roanoke will play a 120-game schedule beginning May 2 and ending September 2. Each club will play the others 20 games at home and 20 away. Each has nine Sundays at home. In the cases of Harrisonburg and Staunton, where Sunday ball is not played, the games will be shifted to nearby fields, as was done last year.

The all-star game will be staged on July 9 when it is expected a combination of the two Shenandoah Valley clubs, Harrisonburg and Staunton, will meet the pick of the other two clubs. July 2 and 10 and August 1, 22 and 27 are open dates to catch up postponed games and avoid a grand spree of doubleheaders as was the case at the close of the season last year.

Harrisonburg won the pennant last year and Hank Hulvey, starting his twenty-first year in organized ball, will again pilot the Turks. He is the only manager to return. Red Brandes, former Richmond Colt, will manage Staunton; Guy Lacey, another former Colt, directs Lynchburg, and Eli Harris, of Beckley, W. Va., has the reins at Salem-Roanoke.

Hemsley Says Days Of Rollicking Over

regularly with the club. About a year ago, Oscar said, Mrs. Hemsley was paid a salary, plus expenses, just to wait at the dressing room door each afternoon, capture "Rollicking Rollie" as he came out and deliver him to Manager Vitt at noon the next day.

It was just a year and two days ago that Rollie put on his last rollicking riot, staying up all one night as the Indians traveled to New York, kicking cuspidors up and down the aisles, tossing lighted matches into berths and crooning lustily—off key.

"How did I know he broke training?" yelled Oscar. "Why he was crying and singing in my berth for two hours. What a night!"

Rollie's record may stand unchallenged a long time: One warning, one suspension and $250 fine, one black eye and two trips home in 1938; loss of $5,000 in fines and pay as a St. Louis Brownie in 1937; a fine and suspension in 1934 after swinging at a cop in Philadelphia—and forgetting to duck as the officer countered accurately; a fine by Manager Charlie Grimm of the Chicago Cubs in 1932 after Grimm had to crawl from a warm bed at 3 a. m. to rescue Rollie from five policemen who allegedly were trying to get away.

It was Grimm who used to tell one of the classic Hemsley yarns. It was of the day when Rollie, in practice, slid into a base and then hobbled to a dressing room.

"So help me," Grimm used to relate, "they took eight pieces of glass and a cork out of Rollie's hip, believe it or not."

Simon to Meet Mann-Everett Fight Winner

250-Pound Heavyweight Ranked in First 10; Daniels in Semi Role

Abe Simon, the 250-pound heavyweight who gave Marty Gallagher such a thorough beating here recently, will get the honor of taking on the winner of the Nathan Mann-Buck Everett 10-round fight Tuesday night at Riverside Stadium, Matchmaker Jimmy Erwin announced yesterday.

Drawing up one of the strongest supporting cards seen in Washington in many a month for his main event, Erwin said that Jimmy Johnston, manager of Simon, will be in town Tuesday to close the agreement for Simon to return.

Maynard Daniels, 22-year-old Marine heavyweight, will fight Gunboat Miller, one of Johnston's fighters, in the eight-round semifinal on the Mann-Everett bout.

Sammy Magro, the Birmingham (Ala) knockout artist who pounded out a decision over El Brookman, of Washington, in Riverside's first fight venture, will also be in the supporting line-up Tuesday, and another heavyweight bout will be added this week, Erwin said.

Simon, now ranked among the first ten heavyweights by the National Boxing Association, gave Gallagher a bad beating at Turner's Arena in the winter season. He made a big hit with a two-fisted style that left Gallagher's face resembling a mishandled head of cabbage.

Mann, acknowledged as one of the cleverest heavyweight fighters currently in circulation, stacks up as a heavy favorite to stop Everett. Tuesday night's business will be Buck's first fight on American soil since returning from a European tour two months ago, where he piled up a string of seven knockouts and one defeat. Buck always puts up a terrific fight, regardless of the fact that he's gradually becoming known as America's No. 1 knockout victim.

Dodgers Send Lucas To Montreal Farm

Nashville, Tenn., April 17 (AP).—Larry McPhail, general manager of the Brooklyn baseball club of the National League, announced here today that Charles (Red) Lucas had been signed for service with Montreal, of the International League, a Dodger holding.

Lucas will be a relief pitcher, pinch-hitter and coach. For many years with the Cincinnati Reds and later with the Pittsburgh Pirates, Lucas was with the Chattanooga club, of the Southern Association, last season.

Records of the Old Timers Are Safe for Years to Come

The Baseball Marks of Ruth, Cobb, Hornsby And Speaker Beyond Reach of Most Moderns

By the Associated Press

New York, April 17.—Baseball's brand-new record book came off the press today, and from the first quick glance, you got the idea that the fellows who keep the records might just as well take a holiday for the next few years.

For, with the absence of Lou Gehrig from active duty, there doesn't seem to be another guy around who's going to do any major rewriting chore on the books for a long time to come. Lou was the last of the larrupers with a chance to push fellows like Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb, old Honue Wagner, Tris Speaker and the Rajah Hornsby right out of "the little red book" of records—the baseball writers' "bible."

Oh, sure, things like Bobby Feller's no-hitter will always find a place in the pages, and some clouter is going to get hot for three homers a game or some such stunt every year. But for piling up liftetime totals in runs, hits, homers, triples, runs batted in, and such, the little red book doesn't show anyone around today who's going to do it soon.

Of those still active, whose names appear in the records right now, master Melvin Ott and pious Paul Waner, who outfield for the Giants and Pittsburgh Pirates, and Jimmy Foxx, of the Boston Red Sox, are the leaders. But none of these can look ahead to many more years of active service, so their chances of taking over are poor at best. Perhaps Joe DiMaggio can do it, but it won't be tomorrow, you can bet on that.

For instance, there's the Babe rightup on top with 714 homers in his lifetime. Gehrig finished with 493. Foxx has 464 and Ott 369, and any bookmaker will give you better than 6 to 5 they don't make it before they hang up for keeps. Or look at Tris Speaker's record of 793 doubles. Closest to him among those still in harness are Paul Waner, with 540 and Al Simmons, who drew a "life" with the Athletics this year, with 529. In the triples department, Waner, with 185 isn't even with telegraphing distance of the 312 Sam Crawford piled up with Cincinnati some years back.

Dean's Victory Over Yanks Was His First Complete Game; Six Rookies Are Lead-off Men

Opening Day Games Have Lost Luster; No Standing Lines

By Judson Bailey
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, April 17.—Bob Feller and Mose Grove are great men, too, but what do you think of Chubby Dean, who beat "them Yanks" for the Philadelphia Athletics . . . His ten-inning stretch was the first time he had ever pitched more than seven innings in one major league game, although he worked just about every day in the latter half of the 1939 season as a combination relief pitcher and pinch-hitter . . . They say he appealed to Connie Mack this spring for starting assignments, and look what he got for the asking.

Although the ball clubs still have all the hoop-la of raising the flags, throwing out the first ball, etc., opening day has lost some of its glamour . . . In the good old days when Cincinnati's Reds were first-day wonders it was not unusual for the bleacher line to start forming two days ahead of time, but this year nobody showed up, even on Monday, the day before the game . . . Could they still be suffering from the World Series shock?

The Chicago Cubs have new uniforms that look like union suits. . . . Instead of shirts they wear sleeveless jackets over wool jerseys. . . . Not a single Yankee pitcher worked the full nine-inning route in spring training, but they'll probably be going the distance regularly from now on. . . . None of the St. Louis Cardinals' chuckers went the whole way in the spring either, but this was just the right training for the Blades' system; Ray used four pitchers in the opening game.

"CHUBBY" DEAN

Mike McCormick Only Promising Rookie to Make Good in Opener

Both Boston ball parks have had their outfield borders reconstructed, shortening the distance from home plate to the fence. . . . Maybe it was because the managers didn't know what else to do with them, but an unusual number of rookies have been made into leadoff men, notably Bob Kennedy of the White Sox, John Rucker of the Giants, Herman Schulte of the Phillies, Johnny Gilbert of the Dodgers, Sebastian Sisti of the Bees and Dominic DiMaggio of the Red Sox. . . . In addition, Benny McCoy and Rip Radcliff, new to the Athletics and Browns, were placed at the head of the batting order. . . . Nearly every one of the rookie flashes went hitless yesterday, too, but Mike McCormick, the Reds' new leftfielder, was an exception with a double and a single in four trips. . . . He also looked smart defensively.

Besides Joe DiMaggio the Yanks also left Pitcher Atley Donald at home. . . . He's suffering from sciatica. . . . Did you notice the Pirates started without the two Waners in the outfield after all. . . . Carl Hubbell hadn't pitched an opening game since 1935 and he was beaten that year, too, by the Bees. . . . Shortstop Frank Crosetti of the Yanks played 14 innings yesterday and today before getting his first fielding chance.

Woolf's Prompt Pay May Miss Derby Because of Injury

Insco Colt Goes Lame In Workout

Owner Withholds Withdrawal Until Veterinarians Give Final Report

By the Associated Press

Louisville, Ky., April 17.—Chances that Prompt Pay, Herbert M. Woolf's major hope for a second Kentucky Derby victory, would go to the post in the bluegrass classic May 4, were endangered greatly today when the colt pulled up lame in a workout.

Owner Woolf, who watched the son of Insco-Stitches in his first ambitious trial at Churchill Downs, said he would withhold definite announcement on the possibility of a withdrawal until veterinarians made their final report tomorrow.

Prompt Pay had really "turned on" to splash through the sloppy going in 0:23 4-5, 0:49 for the half mile, but at the head of the lane he was seen faltering—as Jockey Clayton Perkins later confirmed—and was obviously in distress when he reached the 6 furlongs in 1:17 2-5.

Colt Favored Foreleg

Trainer Ross Higdon noticed the colt favoring his right foreleg jogging back to his stable. After cooling out, Prompt Pay was unable to place his weight on the injured member.

Dr. T. A. Fowler, Woolford Farm's private veterinarian, although unable to determin the exact nature of the injury immediately, expressed opinion it was a blind quarter crack and possibly a fracture of the navicular bone.

Either would likely put the colt on the shelf 60 to 90 days.

Woolf, taking the matter philosophically, declared "such breaks are only a part of the game and can be expected."

Woolf Has Other Hopefuls

The Missouri sportsman has also as derby eligibles, although they were not so well regarded as Prompt Pay, Inscolad, another son of Insco, and the filly Inscolassie. His Lawrin won the 1938 derby.

Other derby candidates working out today included Milky Way's Gallahadion, which breezed a mile in 1:45 1-5, and the Lexbrook Farm's Designer, which splashed 6 furlongs in 1:18 4-5, accompanied the first half by Potranco.

DAMAGED GOODS had some early speed. MY ELSIE was always outrun.

SCARLET O was close up from beginning, wore down DARK MAY to take command and weakened through stretch. NANCY MAE outrun for a half, lacked racing room in early stretch and came willingly at close. DARK MAY ran LADY ORCHID into defeat to get to front and weakened gradually when caught. JOANEY B had no excuses. LADY ORCHID forced early pace and stopped badly.

One Jest Wins At Jamaica; Favorites Fail

Conde Rico Finishes Last in 5-Horse Field of Feature

By the Associated Press

Jamaica Race Track, April 17.—Another good-sized crowd braved the cold and a continued threat of rain here today and business again was good, but the mutuels-minded throng was left staggering after a string of short-priced favorites bit the dust with painful regularity. After the featured fifth event, called the Baisley Purse, not a single choice had made the grade and only four favorites had been successful in 19 races decided here to date. Fighting Fox, on opening day, was the only winning choice. Three got down in front Tuesday and none had scored in today's first five events.

The defeat of Isidore Bieber's South American gelding, Conde Rico, in the Baisley, was one of the most stunning setbacks of the meeting. Backed down to odds of 65 cents to one dollar, the veteran finished last in the field of five over the mile and a sixteenth distance.

W. C. Winfrey's One Jest, giving Jockey Don Meade a double, took the purse by a half length in the blanket finish. R. C. Thatcher's Grandever was second, a head before Balloter. A half-length farther back, Chief Gamble held a length margin over Conde Rico. One Jest, paying $8.50 was timed in 1:46 flat.

A crowd estimated at 10,000 installed Ronnie Bane an odds-on choice over four other claiming steeds in the opener. After a nip-and-tuck duel, the lightly weighted favorite bowed by a head to the well-played Goes Fast, which had not started since last September. Mountain Echo trailed the pair by ten lengths. Goes Fast returned $9.10 and finished in 1:13 3-5.

Sweet Sukey led all the way to take the 5-furlong second race. Don Meade rode the winner which registered by a length and a half over My One. Willidot was beaten ten lengths for the place, while Baby Joan F. was an ignominious fourth. The winner paid $6.50.

Profit Taking, Heavy Rains Lower Wheat

By the Associated Press

Chicago, April 17.—Overshadowing temporarily the war and Europe's wheat situation, good domestic grain belt rains that reached downpour proportions in some localities today touched off profit taking that lowered wheat prices almost a cent at times.

On the other hand, corn prices developed independent strength, with deferred contracts at or above the more than two-year highs established yesterday. Selling of wheat was augmented by hedging.

Final prices, near the highs of the day, were unchanged to ½ lower compared with yesterday, May, $109.⅛-¾, July, $1.08¾-⅝. Corn was ⅛-½ up, May, 62½-⅝, July, 63⅜-¾; oats unchanged to ⅛ lower; soy beans ½-1¾ lower; rye unchanged to ⅛ down and lard 5 higher.

Esso Dealers Discuss Summer Selling Campaign

Plans for an aggressive sales and advertising campaign to be conducted during the spring and summer months were explained to Esso dealers at a meeting held by the Esso marketers at the Mayflower Hotel last night.

After details of this campaign were discussed a talking motion picture, "Design for Power," was shown.

"This picture," said F. R. Washington, "proves conclusively that there is a difference in gasolines. The film explained through graphic demonstrations why such qualities as long mileage, smooth power, quick starting, rapid warmup, and freedom from knocking and gum formation are desirable in a modern fuel, and explained just how research has made it possible to combine them in one fuel and make them available to the motorist."

Steel Decline Hits Bottom, Crucible Says

Jersey City, N. J., April 17 (AP).—Crucible Steel Co.'s current operations of around 60 per cent of capacity appear to be the "bottom" of the decline from last fall's brisk business, with indications of an upward trend now showing, F. B. Hufnagel, chairman, told stockholders at the annual meeting.

"The open orders as of April 1 were not of sufficient volume to assume very satisfactory operations for that month," Hufnagel said.

Retail Sales Advance 5.9 Per Cent in March

St. Louis, April 17 (AP).—The National Retail Credit Association, in a survey of 11,413 stores in 30 cities, reported today their total retail sales averaged 5.9 per cent higher last month than in March, 1939. Credit sales were up 6.7 per cent and collections 3.3.

Farm Equipment Sales

Greater demand for agricultural equipment during the next few months is forecast in Poor's Industry and Investment Surveys. Increased sales for manufacturers should result from higher farm product prices and gains in domestic farm income. Those concerns having a diversified list of products stand to make the best profit showing.

Steel Price Slash Sets Industry Back

Iron Age Reviews Conditions, Reports Heavier Inventories

By the Associated Press

New York, April 17.—Immediate effect of the surprise price reduction on sheet and strip steel was a setback in a mild seasonal improvement in demand, Iron Age said today in a weekly survey.

"The fact the lower prices are subject to withdrawal at any moment," the review added, "may eventually stimulate a buying movement of moderate proportions, though nothing approaching the enormous coverages of the 'bargain days' of May, 1939, is expected because, for one thing, inventories in the hands of consumers and warehouses are much heavier than they were at that time.

"The new base price of 1.90 cent a pound on hot rolled sheets is $6 a ton above the low level reached 11 months ago."

Industry Caught Off Guard

The cut in quotations, first announced by United States Steel Corporation subsidiaries, caught the industry almost completely off guard.

"In previous acute price weakness," the review declared, rumors of concessions have preceded formal price reductions by periods of at least two or three weeks, but in this instance action was both swift and decisive, once it became known price concessions had been offered.

". . . the leading producer met the situation with more promptness than has been customary in the steel trade.

"The effect on export prices, which were advanced at the beginning of this month, is yet to be determined. There was heavy coverage for export at prices prevailing before the advance, and in the circumstances a temporary lull would have been expected. Nevertheless volume is still good, with indications that more active warfare may create new demands from Europe."

Ore Cut of Little Effect

Steel circles said today a cut of 50 cents a ton in the price of iron ore by Pickands Mather & Co., would affect only about 16 per cent of the total volume shipped to lower lakes docks. The cut is not expected to affect the price of steel.

The new prices announced by Pickands Mather, large sellers of ore and operators of the second largest fleet of ore carriers on the Great Lakes, were $4.45 a gross ton delivered at Lake Erie ports for Mesabi non-Bessemer; $4.75 old range Bessemer and $4.60 for Mesabi Bessemer and old range non-Bessemer. The rate applies to 1940 delivery.

Cotton Erratic, Market Closes 7 Down to 1 Up

New York, April 17 (AP).—Foreign cotton markets piped the price tune for local trades in the staple today. New Crop deliveries reached the best prices for the life of the contracts before support dwindled and left the close 7 points lower to 1 higher.

England, one of the biggest buyers of domestic staple, has cut down on her requirements lately, in part to conserve foreign exchange for more urgent war needs.

Winter Freezes Ice Cream Sales

New York, April 17 (AP).—The arctic-like winter, particularly in the East, reduced consumption of ice cream so much that the Borden company's profits suffered, stockholders learned today.

Shares Level Off in Modest Upturn Led by Steel on Turnover of 902,010; Foreign Bonds Continue on Down Side

New York, April 17.—Share markets leveled off today after Tuesday's setback. There was no reappearance of selling and a modest upturn in the list was led by steels which also had influenced the dip in the preceding session.

Active issues, it was noted, were virtually unanimous on the gaining side with selected pulp and paper, metal and mining, shipbuilding and some of the aircraft shares conspicuous for improvement.

The composite for the 100-stock index was 0.12 point higher on turnover of 902,010 shares, which compared with a decline of 0.58 point on 1,505,860 shares the day before.

Optimism Spurs Rise

The rally in stocks which c entered on the steel and selected stocks in other divisions appeared to be based principally on optimistic surmises.

Two items could have drawn support to the steels. The first was an estimate by the Iron Age that steel production at midweek was at 62 per cent of capacity. The other was news that Ford Motor Co. had placed an order for 20,000 tons of steel and other manufacturers had contracted for fill-in lots.

International Paper Up

International Paper issues were the most prominent of all listed stocks, the common leading the list on 56,100 shares at a net advance of 1⅝, while International Paper preferred was the third most active, up 3¼. Both were at new highs.

Automotive issues, notably some of the lower-priced stocks, and auto equipments, were actively traded at improved prices, including Willys-Overland and Kelsey Hayes. New York Shipbuilding and International Mercantile Marine were leaders in the ship group.

Anaconda copper was in demand following announcement at the annual meeting in Butte of large first-quarter profits and arrangements to reduce the company's annual interest charges by $1,136,500. The shares finished a point higher.

Rayonier and West Virginia Pulp were at new highs. Aircrafts met with profit taking when the news came out that Allied orders for planes would be placed at an early date.

Several issues sold at new lows, including International Business Machines, affected by the international situation. Others to establish new 1940 lows were International Nickel and American Radiator.

Foreign Bonds Drift Down

In quiet listed bond trading, foreign dollar issues of various descriptions continued to drift downward, owing to the visible danger of still more countries being drawn into the great European conflict.

Norwegian, Danish and Italian bonds were most affected, the losses ranging from 1 to 5 points.

Australian securities were in mild demand, but Canadians were uncertain. French and German bonds held around former levels. Trading in all bonds was $5,080,000, which is only half the volume of what once was regarded as a normal session.

Seaboard Line Bankruptcy To Be Sought

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., April 16.—Holders of certain securities of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, which has been in receivership for nine years, have informed the Federal District Court here they will ask that the road be placed in bankruptcy.

Attorneys for the underlying bondholders' protective committee and holders of equipment trust certificates of the railway told District Judge Luther Way that they are preparing a petition to that end.

A hearing on two plans for reorganization under the receivership was to have been held today by Tazewell Taylor, special master appointed last October by Judge Way to speed reorganization of the railway. It was postponed, however, until May 21.

Meanwhile, Judge Way authorized receivers L. R. Powell, jr., and Henry W. Anderson to pay approximately $185,000 to trustees of general mortgages and attorneys for the trustees for services rendered and expenses incurred during the whole period of receivership. The amount was approximately 60 per cent of the approximately $260,000 which Special Master James E. Heath had recommended be paid. Judge Way did not decide on the question of the ultimate payment of the other 40 per cent.

In a separate action, which concerned the Seaboard, the Baltimore Steam Packet Line, familiarly known as the Old Bay Line, sought court authority to purchase assets of the Chesapeake Steamship Co. Both operate passenger and freight steamers between Norfolk and Baltimore.

It was proposed that the Old Bay Line declare a dividend of $600,000, payable in its debentures, and then issue $900,000 more in debentures to be used in purchasing the Chesapeake Steamship Co. assets. The Alter Co., in turn would purchase from the Seaboard, which owns the Old Bay Line, 50 per cent of the capital stock of the Old Bay Line, using the $900,000 in debentures for that purpose.

Largest Expansion Since 1931 Predicted At Annual Meeting

By the Associated Press

New York, April 17.—Walter P. Gifford, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., today forecast a large expansion in the company's 1940 construction.

Speaking to stockholders at the annual meeting, Gifford said:

"Based on construction activities to date this year the 1940 total telephone plant additions, replacements and betterments may be 15 per cent greater than in 1939 and the largest for any year since 1931."

These operations, Gifford added, probably would not require new financing. If the construction program is realized it would result in net additions to plant of about $135,000,000 against $101,400,000 in 1939.

Gain in Phones Expected

The Associated Bell companies, Gifford said, anticipate a greater net gain in telephones this year than was recorded in 1939 which was the fourth best year in history in station increases.

The telephone meeting, an outstanding event of the corporate annual meeting season, attracted about 300 stockholders, including a substantial number of women.

Lewis D. Gilbert, who won the sobriquet of "professional" stockholder from frequent controversies with executives in charge of annual meetings of various companies, debated briefly with Gifford on the merits of competitive bidding in the sale of new securities.

Financing Costs Low

Gifford disclaimed any prejudice against competitive bidding, but asserted the cost to the company in bankers' commission for $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 of new securities sold in recent years amounted to less than 3 cents a share on the company's capital stock.

The shareholders gave Gifford a round of applause when he remarked that the fifty-fifth annual meeting of the big communications company today coincided with his own fifty-fifth anniversary year. It also marked the sixteenth consecutive session at which he presided.

In his closing remarks, Gifford deplored the tendency to pessimism here because of unsettled world conditions.

D. C. Income Tax Yield Reaches $2,179,553

The District's income tax returns reached $2,179,553 yesterday with some 9,000 checks not yet tallied. It was hoped that the combined individual and corporation income tax would yield $3,200,000.

Tax Assessor Edward A. Dent said the amount totaled is made up of $1,312,253 in corporation returns and $867,300 in individual returns.

Meanwhile, Tax Collector Chatham Towers said income tax returns totaling $1,532,241 have been tallied. The difference between the amount Towers has counted and that reported by Dent is owing to different methods of tabulation, it was explained, and to the fact that the tax may be paid in two installments.

Roosevelt Plans Tour of Nation To Unite Party

By International News Service

President Roosevelt plans to leave tonight for a ten-day rest at Warm Springs, Ga., and soon after Congress adjourns, around June 1, to embark on an extended tour of the country in a move to solidify warring Democratic factions, it was was learned today.

Mr. Roosevelt revealed his plans for the Warm Springs visit and the projected June tour of the country to Democratic leaders, in urging them to speed up adjournment of Congress as soon as possible.

The extent of the June tour would depend, he told them, on the condition of his health. He has yet to fully recuperate from his recent attack of intestinal influenza, which delayed his plans for a visit at Warm Springs in late March and early April.

A.F.L. Engineer Union Boosts Tax on Locals

Delegates Hear Taft, Mead, Renominate Georgian as Leader

The International Union of Operating Engineers, an A. F. of L. affiliate, winding up their first convention since 1928, yesterday voted an increase in local per capita tax to the international union from 75 cents to $1 per month.

Before closing the convention last night with a banquet in the Raleigh Hotel the engineers heard Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), Ohio, declare that the administration of relief should be turned over to the States and municipalities, with the Federal Government supplying approximately two-thirds of the total cost.

The present Federal relief program, he said, is inadequate. He also objected to use of relief labor on public works construction projects.

Senator James M. Mead (Democrat), of New York, speaking after Taft, declared he would favor an increase in taxes or an increase in the national debt limit, if necessary, "to prevent starvation" and provide relief work.

The engineers renominated for another term John Possehl, Savannah, Ga., who has been general president for nine years. Seven vice presidents, a general secretary-treasurer and three trustees were nominated without opposition and, with Possehl, will be elected in a membership referendum within 60 days.

Nominees are: Frank A. Fitzgerald, New Haven, Conn., secretary-treasurer; William M. Welsh, New York, first vice president; William P. Walsh, Cleveland, Ohio, second vice president; Anton J. Imhahn, Chicago, third vice president; John J. McDonald, New York, fourth vice president; William E. Maloney, Chicago, fifth vice president; Joseph S. Fay, Newark, sixth vice president; O. W. Carter, Portland, Oreg., seventh vice president; John P. Coyne, New York, chairman of trustees; Charles C. Callan, Washington, trustee, and Charles Gramling, Atlanta, Ga., trustee.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

Charles S. Lochridge, Edward Hymes, jr., and Robert McPherran worked hard to help their senior partners, Vanderbilt and von Zedtwitz, win the championship.

Lochridge opened the seven of diamonds; declarer won, drew trumps, guessing the location of the queen correctly and threw three of his losing clubs on dummy's good diamonds. He gave up one club trick on the finesse of the king to win two overtricks at four hearts.

The five of spades was led against Vanderbilt. He won the ace, played the ace of trumps and led the ten, which he finessed to the South hand, losing to the queen. South promptly played the eight of clubs, and now the trophy donor was forced to decide whether to play "safe" for down two by going up with the ace of clubs, pulling the last trump and discarding all but one of his losing clubs on the high diamonds or to gamble for a set of one.

He decided to gamble, and tried the finesse of the club queen, which lost to North's king. A club was returned and ruffed by South with his last trump. Vanderbilt was set three at his contract of seven hearts, losing a heart, a club and a club ruff.

The trophy donor and his partner optimistically bid the hand to seven hearts and were defeated three tricks. The East-West members of the Long Island Bridge League team, Louis Lipschitz and Al Brodsky, stopped at four hearts and guessed the trump finesse correctly to make two overtricks.

They bid the hand like this:

Youth Wants Jobs, First Lady Says

Philadelphia, April 17 (AP).—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told a woman's Democratic club today, "Jobs—not communism" are the chief concern of modern youths.

Describing most youth movements as a "revolt against inactivity," she said boys and girls of 18 to 20 who ally themselves with supposedly radical organizations "are really looking for work in 90 per cent of the cases." She added:

"Of the remaining 10 per cent, one-half would probably change their political beliefs if they found work."

with Slocum

It's Spring all right. The Circus is in town, the Senators are playing ball up at Griffith Stadium and the weather is meaner than February.

Speaking of Spring, the "We, the People" people had the Nats' owner, Clark Griffith, on the air the other night to fire a coast-to-coast blast at the New York Yankees and to predict his boys would be a "hustlin' ball club, capable of making trouble for anybody in the league."

Having watched some of our great actors, to say nothing of our great statesmen, tremble from stem to stern at the sight of a microphone it was a pleasure to watch the fine contempt and faint boredom Griff had for the pesky little gadget. He paid no attention to it, rehearsed his lines when requested, resumed his discussion of baseball luck with studio visitors, stopped the discussion a moment before he was to go on the air and resumed it promptly at the conclusion of his talk. You would think Griff had spent the last sixty-five years of his life gabbing into the awe-inspiring little mikes.

Amos 'n' Andy, Columbia network's beloved blackface comedy team, have just renewed their contract to broadcast for Campbell's Soups for three-and-a-half years beginning Jan. 1, 1941.

The famous pair is now in its thirteenth year of continuous network broadcasting—twice nightly with but one vacation.

Freeman (Amos) Gosden and Charles (Andy) Correll started as radio collaborators in 1925 and, including their early Sam 'n' Henry career, have probably broadcast something like 8,000 times. They have a recently-compiled record of at least 3,700 scripts, most of which were broadcast twice. Amos 'n' Andy were created on March 19, 1928.

LEAP YEAR LADY by ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY

SMOKY O'TOOLE—Pride of the neighborhood and daughter of

CLANCY O'TOOLE—Retired fireman, a widower who is both father and mother to Smoky.

MRS. HETRICK—Neighbor of the O'Toole's and mother of

KARL HETRICK—Who was to marry Smoky after he returned from a trip West, where he received an inheritance, but instead he married

DAGNE OLSEN—Another belle of the neighborhood.

TEX STACY—Young cowboy actor whom Smoky meets in a theatrical booking office.

Secretly, Smoky decides that she is going to get a man—that she would no longer smart under the questioning eyes of neighbors because she had been thrown over by Karl, who had married Dagne Olsen instead of taking her as his bride.

Smoky has her final tryout in the theatrical booking office for a place as a chorus girl in a new musical production. There were moments when she was scared stiff, as she was called upon to perform for the critical directors.

Chapter 10

SMOKY TRIED to laugh lightly, but Tex caught the same note of pathos he had noted before in her voice, and her eyes clouded suddenly. Then she assumed the reckless air that had found so contradictory to the girl in the kitchen in Astoria.

"You're a funny kid," he told her with an affectionate grin. "I sort of like you."

Smoke decided that Tex Stacy was going to be her first husband. He was nice, and terribly handsome, and some day he might be a big star on Broadway or in the movies. Until a better bet came along, he would certainly do.

That night when she returned home there was a light in the upstairs bedroom of the Hetrick house.

She stumbled up the steps of her own home blindly, and the pain that stabbed at her breast was like a sharp little knife.

It was three weeks later that Smoky saw Karl for the first time since his return with Dagne Olsen. She was standing in the kitchen window after breakfast when Karl went to hang some blankets on the line.

So, Karl helped Dagne with her housework, Smoky thought with a sick heart. Then he must love her. Because Mrs. Hetrick had waited on him hand and foot and spoiled him so badly Smoky had never known him to do a bit of woman's work in his life before. His mother had thought it a woman's duty to wait on a man.

She could not see Karl's face because it was carefully turned the other way. But she noticed that he was wearing a new gray mixed tweed suit that looked as though it might have cost a lot of money. His blond head was bare in the wind and he wore no overcoat.

Later at breakfast she said to Clancy: "I saw Karl. Out hangin' blankets on the line. Can you tie that?"

Clancy shrugged: "What do we care? I bet she'll have him scrubbin' the floors next."

"Serve him right!" Smoky said bitterly.

"You'd think," Shamrock sniffed, "he'd be out looking for a job."

Surprise for Smoky

Clancy changed the subject. "Well, only another week till your show opens! I guess it'll burn 'em up when your picture comes out in the paper Sunday?"

Smoky put down her coffee cup. "What are you talkin' about? My picture in the paper——"

Clancy grinned: "I was savin' it for a surprise. But I can't keep it to meself. Well, I called the Beacon and a reporter come to see me yesterday and I let him have one of your pictures. He's goin' to give you a write-up. Local gal makes good."

"Oh, Pop!" Smoky jumped up and kissed him. "You old darlin'!"

"I guess," Clancy said proudly, "that'll show the neighbors a thing or two. I told the guy from the Beacon you had been plannin' to get married, but decided on a career."

"You old angel!" Smoky was too excited to eat any more breakfast.

She Meets Karl

The show was to open on February 29, Leap Year Day. It was the night before the opening that Smoky, hurrying home from rehearsal very tired, met Karl.

She had run into Kaiser's meat market for lamb chops for dinner and when she saw Karl buying a steak it was too late to get away without being conspicuous.

She caught her breath sharply and was glad she was wearing the snappiest hat and dress in her new wardrobe, and the silver fox jacket. Her blue eyes were veiled by her long lashes and she set her chin with great effort.

Karl's back was turned. He stiffened, but kept his face averted when he heard her voice giving her order. When his steak was wrapped he hurried from the shop and Smoky, her legs feeling like water, sat down on a chair to wait for her chops. She was glad the store was full, and hoped no one had noticed that she had almost fainted with the shock of the sudden encounter with her old love.

Smoky stopped at the vegetable market and bought celery and tomatoes and hurried around the corner and up the street that took her home. She was passing the old vacant store about half way down the block when Karl stepped from the shadows of the doorway.

"Smoky," he said softly, reaching out suddenly and taking her arm to pull her into the shadows beside him. "Smoky, I must talk to you. Please."

Smoky Is Shocked

She was too shocked to run, and pressed her shaking body against the door, waiting. In the darkness Karl was a dim outline and the breath almost left her because he was so near.

"Smoky," he said again, helplessly. Then he seemed unable to go on.

She finally found her voice to say coldly: "What do you want?"

Karl reached out to pull her to him, and she pushed him away with her bundles held tightly in front of her.

Anger that he would try to touch her surged through her and she would have slapped him if her hands had been free.

"You keep your hands off me!" she demanded icily. "If you've got anything to say, make it snappy."

"Oh, Smoky," Karl sounded almost as though he were going to cry. "I guess you would like to kill me for what I did. Wouldn't you?"

Smoky was surprised that she was able to laugh. It wasn't a very good attempt at laughter. Karl was surprised. She said in a voice that shook: "I wouldn't take the trouble to kill you, Mr. Hetrick. You're not that important to me."

"Smoky!" he cried helplessly. "Don't talk like that."

"What do you expect me to do?" she asked. "Bust out cryin'? I don't imagine your wife would be very pleased if she knew you and I were standin' down here. So, if you'll excuse me——"

He Pleads With Her

She took a step and Karl pulled her back. "Don't go, Smoky," he pleaded desperately. "I've got to make you understand. I don't love her, Smoky, honest I don't."

Smoky's heart leaped at the passion in his voice. But she said sarcastically: "Oh, I suppose you married her for her money, then. But if you think I care, you're very much mistaken. I had no intention of marrying you myself. So why should I care who got you? You're no bargain. Why should I want to throw myself away on an Astoria fireman?"

"You're sayin' that because you're mad," Karl wailed helplessly. "You don't mean it at all. We were meant for each other—you and me—Smoky. You know it!"

His words were balm to Shamrock's broken heart. Knowing she had the upper hand loosened her tongue, helped her to go on.

"You ought to be ashamed!" she scolded him with great pleasure. "You, a married man, standin' down here telling another woman you love her when your own wife is home waitin' for you. You—chiseler!"

"Oh, Smoky," he wailed again, and Smoky went on hotly:

Calls Him a Two-Timer

"You're a born two-timer, Karl Hetrick! And I wouldn't marry a man like you if you had $10,000,000. I'm going to marry a real man. A gentleman, who has been to college and had a good education and knows how to treat a lady and respect her."

She ended breathlessly, and Karl said accusingly: "You're goin' to marry that guy that's been coming to your house. That actor in your show? That silly-lookin' Broadway cowboy."

Smoky wondered how he knew about Tex. He must have been watching, or people must be talking. She told him with a superior air:

"It's none of your business who I'm going to marry. But you'll see. I'm going to marry and keep right on with my career, too. If you think I'd bury myself over here in this place with you, you're crazy!"

She ran from the doorway and down the street. Karl was too surprised to stop her. He walked home slowly.

To Be Continued.

Orchestra Musicians To Get Proposal Soon, Says Hayden

A proposal for settlement of the National Symphony Orchestra employment dispute will be submitted to a meeting of the orchestra's musicians within the next few days, it was learned last night.

A. C. Hayden, president of the Musicians' Protective Union, intermediary between the musicians and the Orchestra Association, whose failure to agree on wages and length of the concert season has all but written a death warrant for the symphony, said he hoped to call the musicians together today or early next week at the latest.

At the meeting, he said, the musicians will be informed of a "proposal made to us by the director of the Labor Department's conciliation service, John B. Steelman."

Hayden said Steelman's counter proposal differed from any basis of settlement yet suggested. Hayden declined as much as to hint at the nature of the proposal inasmuch as it was not allowed to be disclosed to the musicians prior to the meeting. He did say, however, that it offers "some hope" for settlement.

The orchestra played what generally was believed to have been its last concert Sunday after weeks of dispute over musicians' demands for higher pay and an increase in the number of weeks in the season.

Klan Abolishes Masks, Burning Of Crosses

Imperial Wizard James A. Colescott issued edicts banning the peephole white visor from klan regalia, restricting parades and burning of the "fiery cross," klan emblem.

Almost simultaneously the Fulton County Superior Court opened trial of Henry Cauthon, first of 17 members and former members of a suburban klan unit to face a jury after several weeks' grand jury investigation precipitated by the flogging death of Isaac Gaston, a barber.

Colescott denied the klan edicts were prompted by the flogging investigations.

G. M. Employes' Ballots Answer C I.O.-A.F.L. Feud

Detroit, April 17 (AP).—Ballots of more than 100,000 General Motors Corporation employes held the answer tonight to a C. I. O.- A. F. of L. dispute over bargaining rights in the corporation's plants in 11 States.

Tabulation of the vote cast in the largest representation poll ever attempted by the National Labor Relations Board—nearly 137,000 G. M. C. workers were eligible to vote—will start at 10 a. m. (standard time), tomorrow, in cities where the plants are located.

Out of the election results may come the basis for a commanding position in G. M. plants for either the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.) or the United Automobile Workers (A. F. of L.).

Russia Shakes Up Planning System

Moscow, April 17 (AP).—The Soviet government today announced a sweeping reorganization of its Economic Council, providing for the establishment of six economic boards under the Council of People's Commissars.

The announcement said the purpose of the shakeup was to "improve the guidance of the economic commissariats by the Council of People's Commissars and the Economic Council, to enable the Economic Council to insure proper coordination of the various economic branches and to improve economic planning and realization of the established plan."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

William F. Santelmann conducts the United States Marine Band Orchestra Wednesday night in a concert of works by members of the Washington Composers' Club in Barracks Hall. Program: Poema (Mary Howe), Soir (Conrad Bernier), Damascus Vignettes (Deane Shure), A Threnody (Edward Potter), Gur Amir (Bertram Shapleigh), Melodrama (Dorothy Radde Emery), Symphonic Visions (LaSalle Spier).

Marine Corps Hall was filled last evening when Capt. William F. Santelmann honored members of the Washington Composers' Club by conducting the Marine Band Orchestra in a program of their works. Inasmuch as the greatest handicap a musician has is that of being considered local, the attendance was gratifying, for it showed that there is no lack of interest in the creative achievements of composers who happen to be resident here and not elsewhere. The concert proved that there are exceptions to the rule that distance lends enchantment to the view.

BROWN

The program began with Mary Howe's admirably scored "Poema," in which that versatile composer, equally adroit in conservative styles and in modern idioms, combined elements from both extremes. This procedure corresponds to the ideational content of the music, which presents aspects of the continual struggle between romanticism and baterialism, and gives victory to the former. The themes are expressive of the opposed factors, the development sections logically worked out, and the harmonic treatment skillful.

Conrad Bernier's "Soir," a meditation on a poem by Victor Hugo, has a melodic attractiveness which disguises its technical neatness and its structural symmetry. The music is sensitive and appealing in the disclosure of emotional poesy, and the instrumentation suggests certain timbres of the organ.

Deane Shure was represented by four sketches from his "Damascus Vignettes," an orchestral fantasy embodying reminiscences of the composer's travels in Syria and Palestine. The descriptive music is highly colored and piquant, with harmonic effects from the Orient. The sections played were "Old Brass Worker With Cane," "Wheat Winnower Dancing," "Flax Spinner," and "Olive Grove Keeper." The second was introduced by an ingenuous and unusual cadenza for tympani which rivals the tympani effects in Strauss' "Burleske." The "Flax Spinner" is notable for the variety of humming imitations distributed through the choirs, and the last is preceded by a clever cadenza for two bassoons.

Edward Potter's "A Threnody" is a deeply felt and expressly scored commentary on a poem by Edna St. Vincent Millay. Its elagiac mood is sustained with dignity, and it has a thematic beauty of true poetic quality, while the harmonic fabric is rish in color.

"At the Portal" and "Heroes of Old" were selected by Capt. Santelmann from the four sketches comprising Bertram Shapleigh's "Gur Amir." This music, descriptive of such dreams of the past as one might have at the tomb of Tamerlane, has vigor and imaginative vitality, and the scoring suggests barbaric pageantry.

"Melodrama" by Dorothy Radde Emery had its first hearing in an orchestral version. The music was written for a burlesque pantomime recently given by the Washington National Ballet with choreography by Lisa Gardiner, and was played at that time on two pianos. In the instrumented form, it displays more fully its engaging qualities of humor and irony.

LaSalle Spier's "Symphonic Visions" had its premiere last November at a concert of the National Symphony Orchestra. Five of the sections were played last night, and the rehearing confirmed one's earlier impressions of the fine structural proportions of the work and the skill with which the composer has used the cycle device with a theme of powerful projective nature.

Transit Chief Heads Trust Inquiry Jury

Merrill Is Foreman To Hear Evidence On Gypsum Industry

Edward D. Merrill, president and general manager of the Capital Transit Co., was sworn in by the District Court yesterday as foreman of a special grand jury which will investigate alleged violations of the antitrust laws in the nation-wide gypsum industry.

Gypsum is widely used in building operations and Department of Justice officials suspect that prices are being kept up by agreement. Some firms have been ordered to produce their records before the grand jury.

The inquiry here is part of a national drive against unlawful combinations in the building industry, which Thurman Arnold, chief of the antitrust division, blames for high building costs.

The special grand jury will hold its first meeting today, to receive evidence presented by George B. Haddock and Grant Kelleher, special assistants to the Attorney General.

Plan Commission Backs 16th Street Subway

Construction of a vehicular underpass at Scott Circle on the line of Sixteenth street was advocated yesterday by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Satisfied with the performance of the newly opened subway at Thomas Circle, the commission approved plans submitted by District building officials to build another at Scott Circle two blocks away.

The commission agreed with Engineer Commissioner David McCoach and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, that the proposed underpass should run along Sixteenth street, rather than Massachusetts avenue.

A $15,000 item to draft detailed plans for the project was originally included in the District's 1941 appropriations bill but was eliminated on the House floor. It may be restored by the Senate.

Brown said the commission approved land purchase contracts for expansion of Fort Dupont Park and Capt. Whitehurst's proposal that lower Fourteenth street southwest, below the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, should overpass Maine avenue to relieve an acute traffic problem also was approved.

The commission adopted the recommendation of Norman C. Brown, appraiser and land purchasing officer, to acquire the block bounded by Fourth, Fifth, O and P streets for recreational purposes.

The block, part of which is occupied by Bundy School, will be developed as the Mid-City Playground. Lots which cannot be acquired by private negotiation will be obtained through condemnation.

Hobbs Assails 'Limestone Lobby'

By the Associated Press

Representative Hobbs (Democrat), of Alabama, author of a bill to require the use of marble facing on all Government buildings in the Northwest triangle here, told the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds yesterday the "limestone lobby is the best one that has ever been here."

Limestone interests are opposing the Hobbs bill in hearings before the committee.

Hobbs asserted limestone facing had been used on 25½ of the 26 buildings erected under supervision of the procurement division and its successor, the Public Buildings Administration.

He related there was an unofficial agreement dedicating the executive triangle—in which the Commerce Building is located—to limestone and the Northwest triangle—site of the new War and Navy buildings—to marble. However, he said, a contract already awarded for construction of the first unit of the War Department Building called for limestone facing.

The agreement, he said, resulted from the apparent intention of the Fine Arts Commission to use but one type of facing in each building area.

the Northeast Recreation Center and considered an addition to Rose Park Playground.

The planners reaffirmed their recommendation that Wilson Teachers College be moved into the old Upshur Street Tuberculosis Hospital building and that Abbot Vocational School be shifted to a publicly-owned tract in Brentwood Park.

As it now stands, the 1941 District supply bill calls for transfer of the vocational school to the Upshur street site but does not provide for a new home for the teachers' College.
